Cheaters Beware!!

Cheaters beware: It's getting harder to buy research papers off the Internet without getting caught.

Several Web tools have become available in the last few years that help teachers detect plagiarism. TurnItIn.com is a Web site where teachers register and pay an annual fee. Students must submit their papers to the Web site before turning them in to the teachers. The site uses a database of papers and search engines to look for matches of strings of the same words and sends the results to the teachers.

TurnItIn.com is owned by iParadigms Inc. of Oakland. The software for the program was developed by iParadigms Inc. in 1995 to monitor the growth of Internet plagiarism at the University of California-Berkeley. The company created TurnItIn.com two years ago, and has some 7,300 subscribers from around the world, said Chief Executive Officer John Barrie.

Barrie said that about 30 percent of the papers submitted to the site have been plagiarized. "This is far and away above what you normally hear reported," said Barrie, who believes the stated numbers are much lower because many don't get caught or admit to having plagiarized.
