THE ONLY TRUE PORTRAIT OF WASHINGTON.

JUST PUBLISHED,
T. B. WELCH'S MAGNIFICENT
PORTRAIT OF WASHINGTON.
Engraved (by permission) from Stuart's own original portrait, in the Atheneum, Boston.

This superb picture, Engraved under the superintendence of THOMAS SULLY, Esq., the eminent and highly gifted artist, is the only correct likeness of Washington ever published. It has been characterized as the greatest work of art ever produced in this country. As to its fidelity, we refer to the letters of the adopted son of Washington, GEORGE WASHINGTON PARK CUSTIS, who says, "It is a faithful representation of the celebrated original," and to CHIEF JUSTICE TANEY of the Supreme Court of the United States, who says. "As a work of art its excellence and beauty must strike every one who sees it: and it is no less happy in its likeness to the Father of his country. It was my good fortune to have seen him in the days of my boyhood, and his whole appearance is yet strongly impressed on my memory. The portrait you have issued appears to me to be an EXACT LIKENESS, representing perfectly the expression as well as the form and features of the face." And says SENATOR CASS, it is a life like representation of the great original. PRESIDENT FILLMORE says, "The work appears to me to have been admirably executed and eminently worthy of be patronage of the public." Says MARCHANT the eminent portrait painter, and the pupil of Stuart, "your print to my mind is more remarkable than any other I have seen, for presenting the WHOLE individuality of the original portrait, together with the noble and dignified repose of air and manner, which all who ever saw him considered a marked characteristic of the illustrious man it commemorates."

For the great merits of this picture we would refer every lover of Washington to the Portrait itself, to be seen at the office of this paper, and to the letters of the following Artists, Statesmen, Jurists and Scholars accompanying it

ARTISTS.—Marchant and Elliott, of New York; Neagle, Rothermel and Lambdin, of Philadelphia; Chester Harding, of Boston; Charles Fraser, of Charleston, S. The Evening Post.

A Strauge Story.

A remarkable circumstance is related by Mrs. Catherine Crowe, in the "Night side of Nature," as having occurred at Odessa, in 1842. An old blind man named Michael, had for many years been accustomed to get his living by seating himself every morning on a beam, in one of the timber yards, with a wooden bowl at his feet, into which the passengers cast their alms. This long continued practice had made him well known to the inhabitants, and as he was believed to have been a soldier, his blindness was attributed to the wounds he had received in battle. For his own part he spoke little, and never contradicted the opinion. One night Michael, by some accident, fell in with a girl named Pawleska, who was friendless, and on the verge of perishing with cold and hunger.—The old man took her home and adopted her, and from that time instead of sitting in the timber yard, he went about the streets in her company, asking alms at the doors of houses. The child called him father, and they were extremely happy together.

But when they had pursued this mode of life for five years, a theft having been committed in a house where they had visited in the morning, Pawleska was suspected and arrested, and the blind man was left once more alone. But, instead of resuming his former habits, he now disappeared altogether, and the circumstance causing suspicion to extend to him, the girl was brought before the magistrate to be interrogated with regard to his probable place of concealment.

"Do you know where Michael is?" inquired the magistrate.

"He is dead!" replied she, shedding a torrent of tears.

As the girl had been shut up for three days, without any means of obtaining any information without, this answer, together with her unfeigned distress, naturally excited considerable surprise.

"Who told you that he was dead?" they inquired.

"Nobody."

"Then how can you know it?"

"I saw him killed."

"But you have never been out of prison."

"But I saw it nevertheless?"

"But how was that possible? Explain what you mean,"

"I cannot. All I can say is, I saw him killed."

"When was he killed, and how?"

"It was the night I was arrested."

"That cannot be; he was alive when you were seized."

"Yes, he was; he was killed one hour after that; they stabbed him with a knife."

"Where were you then?"

"I can't tell, but I saw it."

The confidence with which the girl asserted what seemed to her hearers impossible and absurd, disposed them to imagine that she was really insane, or pretended to be so, so leaving Michael aside, they proceeded to interrogate her about the robbery, asking her if she was guilty.

"Oh, no!" she answered.

"Then how came the property to be found about you?"

"I dont know; I saw nothing but the murder."

"But there is no ground for supposing Michael is dead; his body has not yet been found."

"It is in the aqueduct."

"And do you know who slew him?"

"Yes; it was a woman. Michael was walking very slowly, after I was taken from him. A woman came behind him with a large kitchen knife; but he heard her and turned around; and then the woman flung a piece of grey stuff over his head, and struck him repeatedly with a knife. The grey stuff was much stained with blood. Michael fell at the eighth blow, and the woman dragged the body to the aqueduct, and it fell in, without ever lifting the stuff that stuck to his face."

As it was very easy to verify these latter assertions, they dispatched people to the spot, and there the body was found, with the piece of stuff over his head, exactly as she had described. But when they asked her how she knew all this, she could only answer, "I don't know."

"But you know who killed him."

"Not exactly; it is the same woman that put out his eyes; but perhaps he will tell me her name to-night, and if he does, I will tell you."

"What do you mean by he?"

"Why, Michael, to be sure."

During the whole of the following night, without allowing her to suspect their intention they watched her, and it was observed she never lay down, but sat upon her bed in a sort of lethargic slumber. Her body was quiet motionless, except when this repese was interrupted by nervous shocks, which pervaded her whole frame.

On the ensuing day, the moment she was brought before the judge she declared that she was now able to toll the name of the assassin.

"But stay," said the magistrate; "did he never tell you when he was alive how he lost his sight?"

"No; but the morning before I was arrested he promised me to do so; and that caused his death."

"How could that be?"

"Last night Michael came to me, and pointed to the man hidden behind the scaffold on which he and I had been sitting. He showed me the man listening to us when he said, "I'll tell all about that to-night;" and the man—

"Do you know the name of the man?"

"It is Luck; he went afterwards to a broad street that leads down to the harbor, and he entered the third house on the right."

"What is the name of the street?"

"I don't know; but the house is one story lower than the adjoining ones. Luck told Catharine what he had heard, and she proposed to assassinate Michael, but he refused saying, "that it was bad enough to have burned out his eyes fifteen years ago, while he was asleep at your door, and to have kidnapped him into the country." Then I went to ask charity, but Catharine put a piece of plate in my pocket, that I might be arrested; then she hid herself behind the aqueduct to wait for Michael and she killed him.

"But since you say all this, why did you keep the plate? Why didn't you give information?"

"But I did not see it then. Michael showed it to me last night,"

"But what could induce Catherine to do this?"

"Michael was her husband, and she had forsaken him to come to Odessa to marry again. One night, fifteen years ago, she saw Michael who had come to see her. She slipped hastily into the house, and Michael who thought she had not seen him, lay down at her door to watch; but he fell asleep, and then Luck burned out his eyes, and carried him to a distance."

"And it is Michael who told you this?"

"Yes; he came very pale, and covered with blood, and he took me by the hand and showed me all with his fingers."

"Upon this Luck and Catharine were arrested, and it was ascertained that she had actually been married to Michael in the year 1810, at Kherson. They at first denied the accusation, but Pawleska insisted, and they subsequently confessed the crime.

When they communicated the circumstance of the confession to Pawleska, she said, "I was told it last night." The affair naturally created great interest, and people around the neighborhood hastened into the city to learn the sentence.
