POETRY.

Written for the People's Journal.

Cupid Sporting.

A pleasant summer's dream it was,
Though it faded far too soon;
Faded with the summer roses,
Faded with the waning moon.
We had met, my summers idol
And myself a thoughtless maid,
Knowing naught of wicked Cupid,
If we did, were not afraid
Of his sharpened poisoned arrows,
That he sends with wondrous skill,
Through the heart of youth or maiden,
Sure to either, cure or kill.

Yes, we met, that golden summer,
And gaily passed the hours by,
With laughter light, and merry jesting,
Now and then a little sigh.
But the sighing came more frequent,
And the laughter grew less gay,
There was something unuttered,
Drove the jesting all away.
Something made the lips quite silent,
When they wished most to converse,
Something kept the hearts asunder,
Things were growing worse and worse.
But Cupid taught us two a lesson:
Taught our eyes to do their part.
Though our lips more closely guarded,
One could read the others heart.
As a transient morning beam;
Till the autumn stealing on us,
Wilts us from our happy dream.
For when Cupid tired of sporting,
Takes us all we could endure;
He removed the poisoned arrow,
And it proved a perfect cure.

Don't Stop Over.

"Don't stop over," the old man said;
As he placed his hand on the young man's head;
"Go it by all means, go it fast,
Go it while leather and horse shoes last;
Go it while hide and hair on horse,
Will hold together. Oh, go it of course—
Go it as fast as ever you can,
But don't stop over my dear young man.
"Don't stop over." You'll find some day
That keeping an eye to the wayward will pay
A horse may run a little too long,
A preacher may preach just a fraction too strong:
And a poet who pleases the world with rymes,
May write and regret it in after times.
Keep the end of the effort in view.
And don't stop over, whatever you do.
"Don't stop over. The wisest men
Once went a little too far with his fun.
Louis Napoleon, as we know,
Stopped over on Max in Mexico
Horace Greeley and Jefferson D.,
And Hilton Helper and J. B.,
And Andrew Johnson, the great, I won't,"
All sloped over—take care you don't.
"Don't stop over; distrust yourself,
Nor always reach to the highest shelf
The next to the highest will generally do.
And answer the need of such as you.
Climb, of course, but always stop
And take breath, this side of the top.
And so you will reach in wind an I strong,
Without stopping over." I'm done my song!"

MISCELLANY.

Galesville Twenty Years Hence.

A DREAM, BY CRICKET.

"I dreamed a dream that was not all a dream."

Wearied with the cares of the day, I betook myself to my room to enjoy my meerschaum, and look over the PEOPLE'S JOURNAL. I had finished reading the Indian story, and waded partly through "Aunt Nabbys" bad spelling, when old morpheus got in my wake, I was obliged to succumb, and I wandered in dreamland. Suddenly I found myself flying away with lightning speed behind the Iron Horse; I was on the Troy and Galesville railroad, bound for the latter. I had resided there twenty years ago, and impelled by old association, and a strong desire to witness its improvements, I determined to visit them. The engine whistled and in a stentorian voice the brakeman called out "Galesville." As I alighted, by the aid of a stout cane. I was completely bewildered; my imagination could not have painted such a change, I looked in vain for some familiar house or tree, the depot, (nearly equal to the Michigan Southern) was located on what used to be the farm of Mr Collamer. At the back stand I had the pleasure of recognizing my guardian friend Oscar T——. Age had dealt lightly with him, yet many silver hairs were mingled with the black ones. He invited me to his home, (if such a place could be called a home), and he told me of many of my old friends, and his own welfare. He said he had tried clerking, farming, and a little of every thing, till he went to driving hack; all his friends patronized him, and were very liberal, often giving him an extra shilling or two, which helped keep grim want from his door. I thought it a pretty good hint, and gave him an extra "scale," as he drove me down Third avenue. Lo, what a change! Church spires gleamed from every street; brick and marble glistened in the bright sunlight; trees shaded the marble pavements, and street lamps guarded every corner from the God of darkness. My first enquiry was for the Hamilton House, and its proprietor; a splendid brick block stood where the old house once stood, and in answer to my enquiry in regard to Mr. H——, "Oh, Bob, he went crazy on the temperance question not long since, and is now lecturing in place of John B. Gough."

The old firm of W. L. & E. B. B., had long since dissolved. Lewis, a poor decrepid old man, was selling pins and needles out of a basket round the streets, while his worthy brother, Barber, was peddling fish. Calvin B——, after doing a lusing business for many years, finally "fused" his breath. His elder bro was selling peanuts on the corner, the second being more ambitious and improving with the place, was associated with Henry Montgomery in the practice of law. Henry M——'s brother, the bright eyed Charley, was cashier in the Fourth National Bank, while Willie T—— was President. I enquired particularly for W. Pott R—— and learned that he had tired of merchandising and fast horses, and from dire necessity was cultivating a small patch of ground, the use of which was kindly donated by his friend Martin Shearer. Just then my attention was attracted by an old rickety cart, the driver thereof, calling out lustily cabbage and onions, cabbages and onions, and sure enough there was Pitt, with half a dozen little Pitties, stored away among the garden truck, looking the complete picture of dirt and artfulness. Herbert was occupying the honorable position of boot black in the American Hotel, on Broadway; he had been employed in Bob Wells barber shop, but appropriating too many "stamps" to his own use, his colored boss discharged him. Jerry P——s grocery shop had long since disappeared, and Jerry himself was acting as pack peddler for the new Methodist Society. I enquired for my loquacious friend Jake R—— "The Schaghticoke Lawyer," Oh, he after fighting the abolishonists for several years, finally turned one himself, and so black a one that he disowned his son because he would not marry a recent importation from Liberia.

Dr. C—— was making coffins instead of filling them. Jemmie C—— married and farmed it on the North Plains for a few years, but was now selling Sauer Krout, Bologna Sausages and Lager Bier. Rans. G—— was tending bar at a saloon on Tenth street. I naturally asked for his brother Sam, and was told the firm of Green & Perington, run one of the largest flouring mills in the city. Peter A. P—— had left the harness business, and joined the Hoofman & Morse Minstrels, then playing nightly in Canterbury Hall. Ezra G. S—— was peddling clams. Lewis T—— after shoeing horses for several years, got himself well shod, and was living at his ease in the same neighborhood with his former opposition in business. John H—— and Elisha S——, both of whom retired from active life with all the stamps necessary to buy their daily grub. Henry S—— was head salesman in the wholesale house of McOmber and Farrer. Fred. H—— had gone on private business to North Africa. Otis T—— was President of a flourishing whittling association.—George P. was occupying a Presbyterian pulpit, wearing a stiff collar and a sanctimonious countenance. Among his deacons I recognized the old familiar face of Bill ——; his red hair long since turned to white. Yet he had not forgoten to spin a yarn, and told me the "goose story" with as sober a face as of old. Lelter P—— was dealing in old rags. Wandering in the cemetery I saw an old sexton leaning on a spade near a new made grave, humming "Hark from the tombs." Looking up as I approached, I recognized James B—— once the best lawyer on the river. I will not tell why he became so reduced, for his story as related to me, was heart rending in the extreme.

Jimmie M. had been in the wool speculation, and amassing a large fortune, retired from business. I was glad to learn Jimmie had done well, and I determined to call on him, well knowing his present position would not cause him to look down upon an old friend, if he did wear a seedy suit; and I was not mistaken. He took pleasure in relating the growth of the place; how Mr. Parker put up paper and flax mills the season I went away; an Eastern company erected a large cotton mill the next season, and other mills were put by different companies, till now, as you see, the whole river is lined with them clear down to its mouth, and in place of one thousand inhabitants that we had in sixty-eight, we now have over fifty thousand, and Union Village, Platt's Corners and Schuylerville are but the suburbs. I told you, you missed it in leaving the place, as this immense water would one day be brought into notice, and we should boast of a city.—You see now how my prophecy has been fulfilled.

From the Berkshire County Eagle.

Union Village.

The traveler in Northern New York comes upon few neater hamlets than Greenwich, or as the place is often called, Union Village.—Nestled in among the hills of Washington County, and washed by the dark waters of the Batten Kill, it leads a contented existence aloof from the turmoil of the outside world. In the soft haze of an Indian summer, when the smoke curled lazily up from the village chimneys, and the brown leaves rustled under foot, I first visited the locality. The traveler leaves the cars at Cambridge, and for the insignificant sum of ten cents a mile, is "staged" into "the village." Seldom has a vehicle transported so much talent. First there was myself and baggage. Next a lap blanket that had twice crossed the Alps, and was bought in England for, I don't know how many shillings. Third, the owner who had accompanied the blanket to "farrin parts." Fourth, a lady who conversed with the ease characteristic of those who have spent a season at the National Capitol. Fifth, but I won't particularize more, suffice it to say that after eight miles of hill and valley we dashed down a declivity over a long bridge, and were landed at our destination.

At first sight one would call the place a compromise between a country post office, and a brisk village. It has features of activity offset by those of quietude. Taken as a whole the community has none of that restlessness, which Macauly describes as "charactoristic of aspiring mediocrity." Rashness is not a predominating quality. We hear of a couple who had courted for seven years, and nobody hurt yet. This period has not yet become statutory, however.

Among the manufactories the Japan Factory is something of a novelty. Rumor says there is but one other establishment of the kind in the country. At any rate there is one here turning out trays and salvers. The metal is cut out in oval pieces and subjected to great pressure from a sort of die. The first impression merely marks out the shape of the tray. It is passed under different machinery until it assumes the required form. Then it is glazed and dried. Next it passes to the ornamenting room where the gilt border is added. This work is done by girls who seem to have acquired much dexterity in the art.—First, the outlines are faintly chalked thro' pattern or stencil plate. Then a preparation like glue is applied with a delicate brush, until the outline is filled out. After the glue has partially dried the gilt is laid on in thin sheets. The superfluous parts are easily removed by motion, and every leaf and flower stands sharply defined. The colors are applied, the whole surface varnished, and the tray is ready for the drying room. The drying is performed in mammoth brick ovens moderately heated. The operatives regard the business as pleasant and healthy. There is no dust, and the odor of the preparations used is said to be beneficial in pulmonary complaints. The gilding room is especially cheerful. The windows overlook the river and are adorned with a variety of houseplants. The brushes are plied dexterously and noiselessly, and the whole scene reminds me of some huge studio, with a school of amateur artists at work.

The Knitting Factory just above is a fine brick building. Twelve hundred yards of knit flannel are made from the raw material into garments every day. The gentlemanly proprietor shows every attention to visitors, and has a just pride in the order and neatness which prevades the establishment.—Lower down the stream are found a paper mill and flouring mill. Still below, the Falls are worthy of a visit. After passing over the rapids a few rods in length, the whole volume of water plunges a distance of many feet into a rocky basin below. The locality is much resorted to by excursionists.

The village itself is laid out very tastily in wide streets shaded by fine trees. There are several very handsome residences and grounds, and the whole place is neat and attractive. The country immediately around is in the hands of good farmers, and everything bears marks of thrift and comfort. We had the pleasure of looking over the premises of Messrs. H. & A. Miller, who have the reputation of being "model farmers." It would well repay any one interested in choice varieties of sheep, to go through their carefully selected and valuable flocks. It was a gratification to observe the order and neatness that characterized the whole farm.

During our stay in the village we attended the funeral of the oldest person in Washington County, Mrs. Wealthy Whipple, aged 104 years. When young she resided in Lancsboro' at the time of Dr. Collins ministry, afterwards at North Adams, and for many years at the place where she died. Her face bore a sweet and contented expression, and had few lines to indicate the century that had passed over it.

Time forbids us to mention the village churches, cemetery, drives, scenery, &c. It is sufficient to say that one can hardly fail to enjoy a visit to the locality. During the summer months especially the scenery is attractive, and when the railroad from Cambridge gets there, as it undoubtedly will within a year, the stage ride may be dispensed with. DANFORTH.

Our Party and its Prospects.

In the State of New York, swords were measured between the Republicans and the Democratic party at the last fall election and it was found that the Democratic party had carried the legislature and taken the canal department and all its patronage.

Since that, elections have been held, town and city elections in the state, and from this Democratic party seem trying to satisfy themselves that things tend to the loss of the Republicans.

However this may be, it is idle to suppose that the Republican party is to carry this state in the fall elections by any surprise.

If the election results favorably to them, it will be by such a system of canvassing and of effort as will satisfy voters that vital principles are at stake and that it is the solemn duty of every member of this party to stand firm and devote time and his vote for its great principles. Nor is this all; the Republican army of voters must be recruited, for unless we throw more votes than at the last fall elections, the great state of New York is lost.—From what source shall the Republican party recruit? Of course she will not, nor can she recruit from herself. She had that to herself last fall, and, yet, lost the state! Is it said all the voters in the state did not come out into nearly 75,000? Can any one say how these voters would have gone? Who are they? Most likely they were war democrats, who took patriotic ranks in good faith, but thought they discovered a weakness and lack of pluck in the policy of the Republican party in not removing President Johnson and other impediments to Reconstruction.

Men, who advising to that end were not listened to, or trusted, or consulted; men who had no voice or part in last fall's nominations than the Indians on the plains. In short they were men who took equal peril and made equal sacrifices to put down rebellion, and who saw that that being accomplished, they were no longer wanted, but were rather in the way of ambitious politicians, and of whom it was said—we can get along without them, he has been a Democrat, put none such in office. Such it is supposed may be the case in every county where the Republican party stood strong.

It is however worthy of thought, how it was in the county of Washington. All the candidates, with one exception, last fall, were taken without any attention to the War Dem-
