FARM INVENTORY HAS

January is the most common month for taking an inventory, which has many uses, according to the Sullivan County Extension agent.

1. Furnish information for income tax returns.

2. Show the financial progress made each year.

3. Give information for making a will.

4. Provide a list of heirs.

"Your farm inventory," says Bruns, "is a list of what you own and owe. You owe it at a given time. It includes the kind and amount of all your property and debts. It's an appraisal for value at any point in time, more than a simple process. You go through the inventory and determine the value and amount of all your property. You follow the inventory system of appraising your farm, and the results are important. You may have to take the inventory at any time in the year, at any time in your life. When you die, your inventory will be the basis for probate of your estate. When you die, your inventory will be the basis for probate of your estate.

THE WOOL ESTATE

The wool estate is a list of all the material used in the production of wool. It includes the kind and amount of all the wool in the farm, the amount of wool in the house, and the amount of wool in the barn. It also includes the amount of wool in the barnyard and the amount of wool in the hayfield. The wool estate is a list of all the wool in the farm, and it must be kept up to date. The wool estate must be kept up to date in order to keep track of the amount of wool in the farm.
