The Corn Sheller, with the labor of two men, or one man and two boys, will shell from forty to sixty bushels of ears in an hour.

RECOMMENDATIONS. We, the undersigned, were invited this day, to see the Corn Sheller above mentioned, in operation, and do not hesitate to pronounce it superior to any machine we have ever seen, for that purpose.

This may certify, that I have witnessed the operation of the above mentioned Corn Sheller, and saw it shell upwards of two bushels of ears in the space of 3 minutes, with apparent ease—and therefore do not hesitate in recommending it to the public as a useful invention and of great utility to farmers.

I, the undersigned, purchased one of the above mentioned Mills, and have used it for some time. From its lightness to handle, and its expedition in cleaning grain (having to run through but once to make it clean enough for seed or grinding) I do not hesitate to recommend it to farmers as the best mill in use that I have ever seen.

We, the undersigned, do not hesitate in recommending the above mentioned Fanning Mill as a useful article to farmers, and from its lightness to handle, and its expedition in cleaning, we esteem it equal, if not superior to any in use at present, at least, that we are acquainted with.

NATIONAL TALES.

A NEW PERIODICAL WORK. The first volume of a series of Tales, translated and compiled from the works of different authors, and not previously published in the United States, was issued from the New York press in the month of July last; and in October next, a second volume will make its appearance.

In the preface to the first volume, the editor announced it to be his intention to continue the work quarterly, if the public patronized the undertaking. Since then he has had the most satisfactory proofs, that his efforts to increase the present stock of literary amusement and instruction have been generally acceptable.

Having offered a premium for original domestic tales, the editor calculates on giving a considerable portion of these in the progress of the work. Already several competitors have appeared, whose productions, if approved of, shall have a place in the forthcoming volume.

"National Tales" will in future be published at 42 William Street, New York, at four dollars per annum. To subscribers who transmit a year's subscription in advance, the four volumes will be forwarded regularly as published to any post town in the State of New-York, free of additional expenses; all charges for conveyance beyond the State, must be paid by the subscriber. Single volumes may be had at one dollar.
