Washington Dissatisfied With Officers; Officers Dissatisfied With Army Life

By DENNIS MONTGOMERY
Associated Press Writer

The rank-and-file officers of the Continental Line scarcely met the standards of George Washington, their commander-in-chief. But they herded a band of yeomen to victory over the world's best soldiers.

Washington said, "Gentlemen of fortune and reputable families generally make the most useful officers."

Yet the officers in Washington's army were fashioned from cobblers, carpenters, inn keepers, surveyors, teachers, iron workers, clerks, wagon builders, farmers, students and Indian fighters. A few were gentlemen of fortune and repute, usually lawyers in civilian life.

To Washington, an aristocratic Virginia planter who admired the professionalism of British officers, his officers seemed an unpromising lot.

Eight dismal months after accepting command of the rebel army at Boston, he commented in a letter to Congress:

"To bring men to be well acquainted with the duties of a soldier requires time. To bring them under proper discipline and subordination not only requires time, but it is a work of great difficulty, and in this army, where there is so little distinction between officers and soldiers, requires an uncommon degree of attention."

At West Point Military Academy, which wasn't founded until 1802, Col. Roy K. Flint of the history department says, "The leadership of his officers was always his biggest problem. They were never as good as the men they led, job for job. The riflemen were always better riflemen than the lieutenants were lieutenants. He never really had as many good officers as he wanted. By and large that remained true through the war."

Aaron Wright, a Revolutionary War private from New Jersey, kept a journal of his experiences. His account of the day his company formed illustrates some of the kinks in the Continental chain of command.

First the men were "sworn to be true and faithful soldiers of the Right Honorable Congress," Wright wrote. "After this we chose our officers. When on parade our first lieutenant came and told us he would be glad if we would excuse him from going, which we refused: but on consideration we concluded it was better to consent; after which he said he would go; but we said, 'You shall not command us, for he whose mind can change in an hour is not fit to command in the field where Liberty is contended for.' In the evening we chose a private in his place."

In many units junior officers served at the pleasure of the enlisted men. They could not be too officious and expect to keep their rank. Clearly, Wright's new lieutenant knew who was in charge.

That was sometimes more than Washington knew, especially in the beginning. There were few uniforms to distinguish officers from soldiers and in the New England ranks, where egalitarianism was important, assignments provided few clues. The general's staff was appalled to learn one company counted its barber among its officers.

Eventually, at Washington's insistence, Congress provided a new method of raising troops by asking the states to raise 88 regiments.

But even reform brought difficulty. The states were entitled to commission whomever they wished. Political appointments were not uncommon and Washington had no say in the selections.

Like the soldiers they led, officers were generally men who could be spared on the home front. The best-educated, the most stable and the most mature were needed at home to develop the fledgling union's political and commercial infrastructure.

European armies, on the other hand, were led by professional soldiers of the upper class, trained in military science. Washington, who had fought with the British against the French and the Indians, greatly admired the officers of the army he was now trying to defeat.

"He wanted his men to be able to stand up to the British for their own self-respect and safety," Flint says. "And he was very interested in giving the impression of a viable military force."

But Washington's officers often were as dissatisfied with their lot as he was with them. Pay was niggardly, food humble and scanty, and clothing allowances often nonexistent. At Valley Forge some were reduced to rags and roast dog.

Desertions were rare, but only because officers were free to resign their commisions and go home. Many did.

Some were sent home to enlist neighbors for their commands. For the unscrupulous, it was an opportunity to profit on enlistment bounties by inflating the rolls. And the same pockets were lined with the pay of dead men reported in active service long after their demise.

Washington threatened hanging for such offenses but he was also philosophical. At home men who chose not to serve were profiting handsomely in the war trade and the men at the front knew it.

Unless officers "could take pleasure in their situation," Washington warned Congress, they would soon be "an insipid mass incapable of acting with vigor ..."

At his insistence, they were awarded half-pay pensions for life, in the style of the European armies.

An Angel Made Blatty Marry

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — William Peter Blatty, author of the bestselling novel "The Exorcist," and amateur tennis star Linda Tuero have been married here.

Asked by friends why he decided to marry, Blatty replied: "An angel made me do it."

Blatty, 47, and Miss Tuero, 23, of New Orleans were married Sunday. It was the third marriage for Blatty.

Guests included Mario Puzo, author of "The Godfather," and comedians Don Rickles and Buddy Hackett.

Equal Time Issue

CBS May Cut Coverage Of Ford

NEW YORK (AP) — CBS News chief Richard S. Salant says CBS live coverage of President Ford's future news conferences is in doubt for the time being. The reason: An "equal time" question.

It was raised by CBS after Ford's early announcement this month that he'll seek another term in 1976. It involves the Federal Communications Commission's "equal time" law on broadcast coverage of political candidates.

According to the FCC, CBS last week asked the agency to reverse a 1964 ruling and exempt live coverage of presidential news conferences from the equal time law.

CBS contends that any legally-qualified Republican candidate opposing Ford for the presidency might now be able to demand equal time on the air within seven days of live broadcasts of a Ford news conference.

There aren't any such candidates now, but CBS notes that several have been mentioned as getting ready to enter the GOP ring, among them former California Gov. Ronald Reagan.

Milt Gross, an FCC specialist on political broadcast laws, says legally-qualified Democratic presidential candidates currently can't demand equal time because they're considered competing only among themselves now.

"Between now and the primary elections and the (Democratic) party convention next year, only the Republicans would have the right to ask for equal time against President Ford," he said.

The issue has lain dormant since 1964. That year, after a CBS query, the FCC ruled 34 days before the November elections that live coverage of presidential news conferences (President Johnson was seeking re-election then) wasn't exempt from equal time demands.

Goss said the issue didn't come up in 1968 because Johnson wasn't seeking re-election. Nor, he said, did it come up in June 1972, when President Nixon, having become a declared candidate six months earlier, held his first televised news conference in more than a year.

He said now that CBS has petitioned the FCC on the matter, "the commission will review our 1964 decision and see if we should change it or not." He said he didn't know when a ruling would come.

Salant said the equal time question is acute because Ford has promised to hold an average of one news conference a month. He was asked if CBS will stop its live coverage until an FCC decision.

"I can't answer that," he said. "I don't want to decide that until it stares me in the face." He later was asked if CBS' live coverage of Ford's news conferences is in doubt until an FCC ruling.

"Yes, that certainly is true," he said.

"We certainly have not made the decision—until this is cleared up—that we'll go ahead anyhow."

You'll be on the go a lot this coming year, with parties and travel occupying your time. A major personal change is also indicated for you.

Scali Returns To ABC News

NEW YORK (AP) — An American Broadcasting Company spokesman said Monday night that former chief U.S. delegate to the United Nations John Scali will return to ABC News shortly as a Washington correspondent.

The spokesman said ABC and Scali, 57, have reached agreement on his return to the network, where he was a diplomatic correspondent before entering government.

Dancers Defect

LONDON (AP) — Three Romanian dancers and a violinist who defected while on a tour of Western Europe will be allowed to remain in Britain, the Home Office said Sunday night.

They are members of the Hotincea folk dance ensemble that visited Coventry last month for a week of performances.

A Home Office spokesman said the four can stay and work in Britain for 12 months and "if they wish to apply to stay after the 12-month period expires that is entirely up to them."

The three dancers, all in their 20s, were identified as Sandu Pobeznick, Georghe Tecucianu and Silviu Ciuciumis, and the violinist as 32-year-old Nelu Chiriac.

Pobeznick spoke to British newsmen and was quoted as saying he and the other two dancers have jobs as cleaners and "It doesn't matter what I do here, any dirty job. It doesn't matter. I'm free, that's what counts. In Romania there is no justice and there never has been under the Communist regime."

Chiriac, a member of the eight-piece orchestra, left the 35-member group when it was still in Coventry, the Home Office spokesman said.

The three dancers defected when they were in Amsterdam waiting to fly back to Bucharest.
