AMONG the men in Ireland marked for prosecution by the English government is James J. O'Kelly. He was correspondent of the New York Herald in Cuba several years ago, during the great insurrection. As he chose the rebel camp for his headquarters, he was enabled to send his paper plenty of letters no less trustworthy than spicy. The Spanish government got hold of him after a while and chose to consider him a spy and not a journalist. He was put in irons and sent to Madrid. He took the whole matter very coolly and when condemned to death, made arrangements to write up his own execution as far as the final scene, which he entrusted to the hand of a subordinate. Castelar procured his pardon and he was sent to Paris. After doing good service there he went to South America and accompanied Dom Pedro to this country in 1876. He then took another trip to Spain and wrote up the marriage of Alfonso and Mercedes in gorgeous style. There was a story current in the metropolis that O'Kelly had just got married in New York at the breaking out of the Russo-Turkish war, and received orders to depart for the front at once, but refused to go unless traveling accommodations were secured for his wife with whom he had no desire to part company. He returned to Ireland recently just in time to be chosen member of parliament from Roscommon.

ONE of the medical officers of London, Dr. S. Gibbon, reports that a Jew's life in London is on the average twice as long as a Christian's. The Hebrews of the metropolis are notoriously exempt from tubercular and scrofulous taint. It is very rare that one meets with pulmonary consumption among them. The medical officer of one of their large schools has remarked that their children do not die in anything like the same ratio as Gentile children; and in the district of Whitechapel the medical officer of health has reported that on the north side of High street, occupied by the Jews, the average death rate is 20 per 1,000, while on the south side, occupied by English and Irish, it is 43 per 1,000.

THE erection of a monument to perpetuate the labors of Thomas Clarkson as an advocate of slave emancipation was inaugurated on Monday at Wisbeach, England, when the first stone of a handsome memorial was laid. The memorial will be a statue with an inscription and has reliefs. It was designed by the late Sir Gilbert Scott and will cost £2,000, of which £600 are still required.

If all man's evil genius, ever invented a more distressing disease than Asthma, I should like to know it. I have suffered for years and never found perfect relief until I commenced using Dr. Taff's Asthma Cure. It works like a charm.—Rev. C. W. Fowler.
