2 Farm Magazines To Combine

Two of the oldest farm magazines in America will combine in December and become "American Agriculturist and The Rural New Yorker," it was announced today.

William F. Berghold, publisher of The Rural New Yorker, and A. James Hall, publisher of American Agriculturist, made this joint statement: "Both publications have played important roles in Northeast agriculture. With the acquisition of The Rural New Yorker by American Agriculturist, the new publication will, as a single magazine, have more widespread coverage and a greater circulation penetration, thereby serving agriculture more extensively and more effectively than ever before."

The Rural New Yorker, with offices in New York, has been a potent voice for Northeast agriculture ever since its founding in 1850. American Agriculturist, in Ithaca, New York, was established in 1842 and is the oldest farm magazine in the United States to be published continuously under the same name.

MISS ROSE ABLE TO ATTEND SCHOOL

Sanfordville — Miss Marilyn Rose, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Parker Rose, Winthrop Road, and a grand-daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Rose, who was injured in an accident with a horse in the summer, is now able to attend her classes at the St. Lawrence Central School, Brasher Falls. She still has to use crutches.

IN HOSPITAL

Mrs. Agnes Williams has received work that her cousin, Lyle Green, Hopkinton, who has been a patient in the Potsdam Hospital, was removed to the Mercy Hospital in Watertown Friday, where he may undergo brain surgery. His condition remains the same.

The Pan-American Highway utilizes a causeway built in Mexico City by the Aztecs, long before the advent of white men.
