New Potato Crop Under Last Year's

Decrease Attributed to Lack of Rain on L. I., Western New York
ALBANY, (AP) — The state's 1951 potato crop is expected to total 28,880,000 bushels—almost five and a half million bushels under last year's.

The State Department of Agriculture yesterday attributed the drop to dry weather on Long Island and in Western New York, while it said, dampness in other areas had made control of plant disease difficult.

On Long Island, the department said a crop of 14,640,000 bushels was indicated. This compares with 17,185,000 bushels there last year, and a 10-year average of 16,155,000 bushels.
