U.S. Weighs Talks With Reds on Main Issues

Big Two Continue Cuba Talks

WASHINGTON, D.C.--The United States and the Soviet Union are continuing their talks on the problem of the Soviet Union's withdrawal of its offensive weapons from Cuba. According to the White House, President Kennedy and Premier Khrushchev have agreed on the need for an unconditional and immediate withdrawal of all Soviet military forces from Cuba. The negotiations will be held in Geneva, Switzerland, and are expected to last for several months. The talks are being held under the auspices of the United Nations and will involve representatives from the United States, the Soviet Union, and the U.N. Security Council. The talks are expected to be difficult and are to be followed by a United Nations Security Council meeting to decide on further steps.

Kennedy's Advisers Skeptical

WASHINGTON—President Kennedy's advisers are skeptical about the chances of a successful withdrawal of Soviet forces from Cuba. The Joint Chiefs of Staff have warned that a military option is still on the table, and the President has been told that the withdrawal will be difficult and time-consuming.

Kennedy's advisers are concerned about the possibility of a military response, and they are urging the President to continue negotiations with the Soviet Union.
