Buried Chinese City Place of Importance

The remains of an ancient Chinese city, the walls of which, before it was destroyed by China's first emperor more than 2000 years ago, once occupied a large territory than is within the spacious walls of Peking, lies beneath three or four feet of earth about fifty miles south of Peking, awaiting the archeologist, writes the Japan Advertiser. About 100 years after Alexander the Great conquered Egypt, or late in the Second century B. C., there arose a king in the then comparatively small China who compared favorably with Alexander in conquests and empire building and whose empire lasted almost until the present day. This was Chin Shih Huang, or Shih Huang Ti (the first emperor) whose rule, ending in 100 B. C., marks the close of the feudal period and the beginning of the empire in Chinese history. Shih Huang Ti subdued the feudal princes, built the famed great Chinese wall and successfully defended the country against the Tartars from the north, standardized money, transportation, writing and other things which aided centralization and destroyed as much of the ancient classics and traditions as possible, with the idea that the history of the Chinese empire should begin with his reign.

Selected Best of All Traveling Companions

The Chinese have a fable of a man who was once summoned to appear for trial under an unjust accusation. The place where he was to be tried was far distant and the journey was long and hard. Just before starting, three disguised figures suddenly appeared and asked to accompany him. Said the first, "I cannot promise to go with you all the way, but I will see that you have comfortable lodgings and plenty to eat and drink so long as I am with you." The second said, "I cannot promise you these things, but I assure you you shall have pleasant companionship, laughter and conversation so long as I am with you." The third said, "I cannot promise you money, nor even pleasant companionship, but I will go with you all the way, plead your cause before the judge, and testify on your behalf." After listening to the offer of all these and weighing carefully their statements the poor man decided to choose the latter. Whereupon the disguised were removed and he found the first to be riches, the second his friends, and the third his virtues. Is there any doubt that his choice was wise?

FORT EDWARD, N. Y., JULY 9, 1924

The office of The Fort Edward Advertiser, which has been closed for the past year, will be opened next Monday morning, according to the present plans, and will resume business as a general job printing office. A local business office of The Greenwich Journal and Fort Edward Advertiser will also be located there. The office will be in charge of Kenneth McEae, who will conduct the job printing business and also have charge of the local news and advertising service. Mr. McEae, whose home is in Schuylerville, has had a number of years' experience in printing and newspaper offices in his home town and in Troy and Glens Falls. He has also attended the Empire State school of printing at Ithaca. The Journal-Advertiser bespeaks for him the cordial support good will which it has so far found the people of Fort Edward very ready to extend.

Village Jail Criticized

A report of a recent inspection of the Fort Edward village jail made by C. D. Patten of the state prison commission was read before a meeting of the village trustees Monday evening. The report speaks harshly of the condition of the jail and says that it must be repaired and improved or it will be ordered closed. The matter is in the hands of a special committee of the trustees. Another state department was also heard from R. K. Fuller, commissioner of canals, calling the attention of the village to the condition of the Argyle street bridge over the large canal. This bridge was erected by the state, and responsibility for its maintenance has been understood to be with the state, but it appears that the state now seeks to place this responsibility on the village. The bridge flooring is wearing out and in need of repairs.
