Mrs. McCollom Again Becomes Matron Of County Jail; Other Appointments

ABANDONS SEARCH FOR SUNKEN VESSEL

Wyndham Reclus, 76, Is Found Dead in One-Room Shack

Seventy-Three Died in Highway Accidents During 1941

Arthur W. Murray Named Deputy Road Superintendent in Brookhaven Town

TWO GIRLS ARE CHARGED WITH THEFT

On Wednesday, December 31, 1941, a large fire occurred in the town of Brookhaven, New York, causing widespread destruction. The fire began in a small factory and quickly spread to several adjacent buildings, including a large warehouse. The fire lasted for several hours and destroyed over 100 buildings, displacing thousands of residents. The cause of the fire remains unknown, but it is believed to have been started by a faulty electrical appliance. The town was left devastated, and the residents were left to rebuild their homes and businesses. The fire also caused significant damage to the local economy, and the recovery process took several years. The event is remembered as one of the most significant fires in the history of the town. The town later established a fire prevention department to prevent similar disasters from occurring in the future. The event is also remembered as a testament to the resilience of the community, as they worked together to rebuild and recover from the tragedy.