President Taft Opens State's Greatest Fair.

New Attendance Record Looked For at Annual Exhibition at Syracuse In September. Biggest Attractions Ever Secured. Unprecedented Demand For Exhibitors' Space.

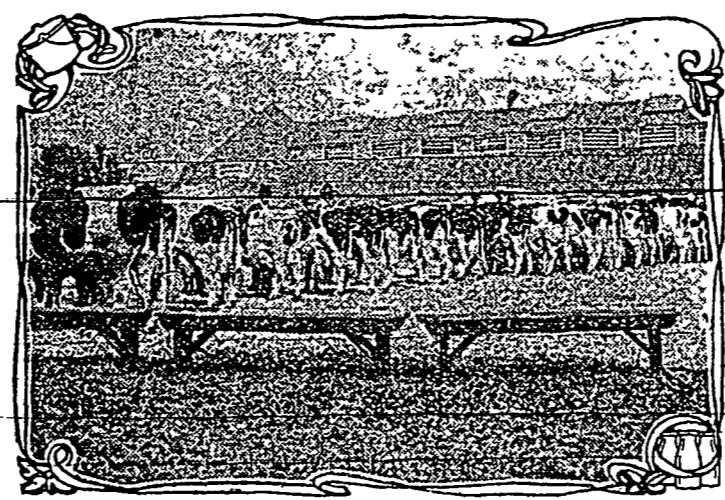

THE thousands who attend the opening of the New York State Fair at Syracuse Sept. 12, when President William H. Taft is to appear, will be impressed with what the state has done in the way of providing a permanent home for the institution to which it looks for the promotion of its agricultural breeding and other interests.

Representing an investment of over $5,000,000, the new buildings with their great walls of light gray brick and towering white columns unquestionably the grandest fair buildings in the world, tell much of a movement to have the Empire State lead in the equipment of its fair plant as it leads in many things.

President Taft will deliver an address in the Empire State court, a broad plaza where it is possible for 50,000 people to assemble. Forming the south side of the court is the Manufacturers and Liberal Arts building, a mammoth structure of rare architectural beauty, erected in 1905 at a cost of $2,250,000. At the north are the new buildings devoted to the purposes of the state garage, the dairy industry, state institutions and the state press. These buildings, similar in character to the Manufacturers and Liberal Arts building, are connected with colonnades 200 feet long. They were completed barely within time for the last fair and will appear to much better advantage this year because of the improvement of the approaches and surrounding lawns and the general development of the Empire State court. This year for the first time visitors to the fair will see the complete development of a portion of the grounds after the permanent plan adopted in 1908 by the state legislature upon the recommendation of the state fair commission.

When the legislature provides the remainder of the appropriations called for in the $2,000,000 grounds scheme there will be buildings of brick and stone for horses, cattle, sheep, swine and poultry, adequate judging rings and the most complete racing course in America. The complete transformation of the grounds will provide the demands upon the state revenue from other directions are not too burdensome, be brought about within five or six years.

Members of the state fair commission, recently appointed by Governor Charles E. Hughes under an amendment to the state fair act, declare that the exhibition in September will in all respects be the greatest ever held under the name of the state, and it must be considered that there has been a state fair annually since 1849, although it is only during the past eleven years that it has been directly in the control of the state. Never before has there been the interest manifested by exhibitors. Months ago all of the LARGE CATTLE CLASS AT STATE FAIR.

The Holstein-Friesian cattle interests will be well represented at the New York state fair this year. To the state's premiums, which are larger than ever, the Holstein-Friesian Cattle Breeders' association has added $100 in prize money. The picture shows a class of Holstein cattle being judged at the fair last year.

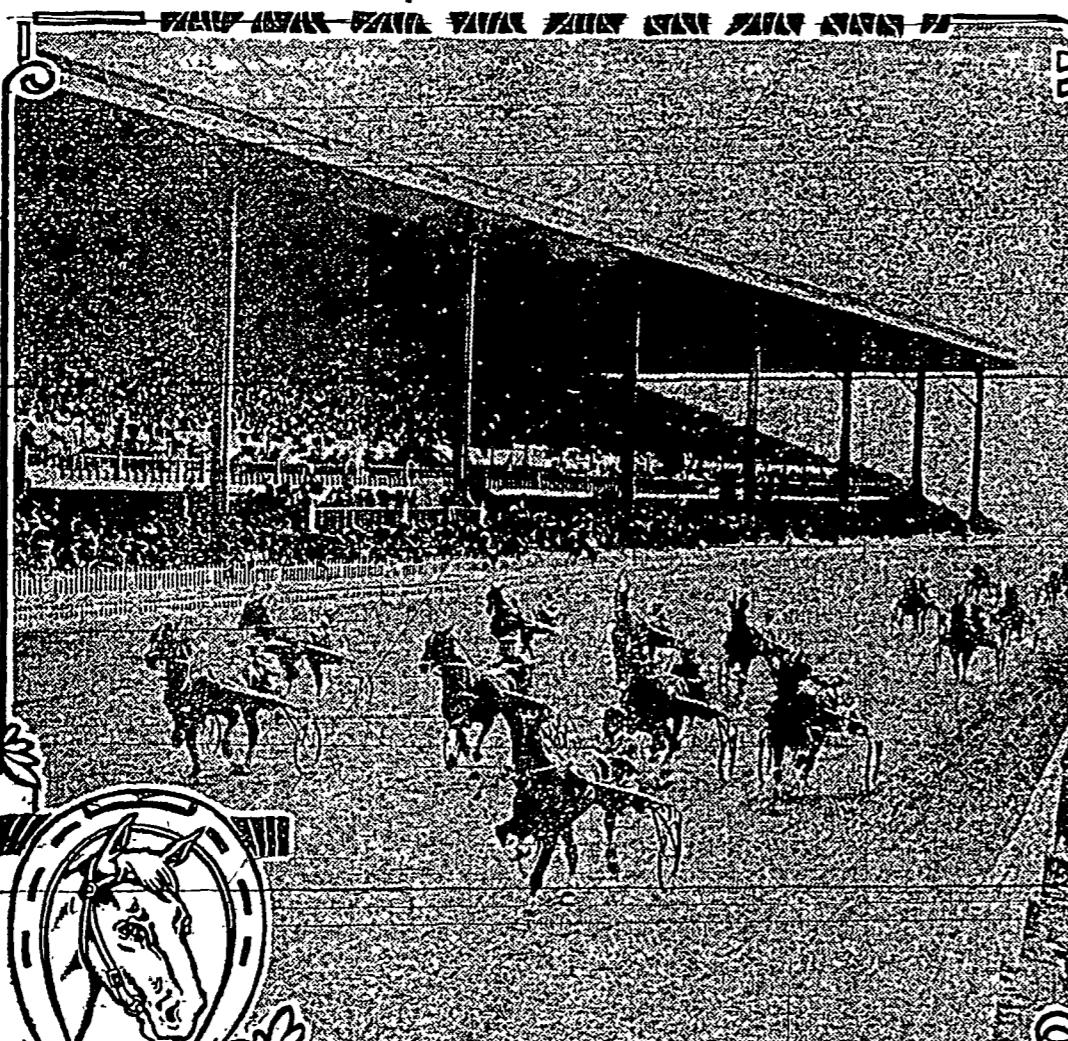

One of Glenn H. Currier's contemporaries will be seen in daily flights over the fair grounds. It will be the first appearance of a heavier than air machine at the fair. During exhibitions will give trials and speed and exhibitions of soaring, diving and altitude climbing. The automobile races on Saturday of the fair will bring out the fastest motorcars in the country of both American and foreign manufacture. The attractions as a whole surpass anything ever arranged for any state fair in the country, which furnishes a basis for the feeling in the community that all attendance records will be broken.

The largest attendance at a New York state fair was that of 1887, when during the six days 183,000 people passed the turnstiles. This bettered the best previous mark by 20,000. This year, the prophecy goes out the figures will climb to over 200,000 which will mean a good sized surplus for the state treasury and speedier action probably by the legislature toward the completion of the permanent plant. In consideration of the remarkable growth and development of the fair in recent years its history is interesting. The legislature went to the assistance of the fair. It had been managed by an agricultural society. From 1810 to 1816 it had always been dependent upon the state, to which it looked annually for help. For many years the fair little more than a country agricultural show was moved about to different sections of the state until 1850 when it was offered to a permanent home just outside of the corporate limits of the city. Under the system of management the State Agricultural society conducted the exhibition with the help of the state and turned the profits into the support of the grounds.

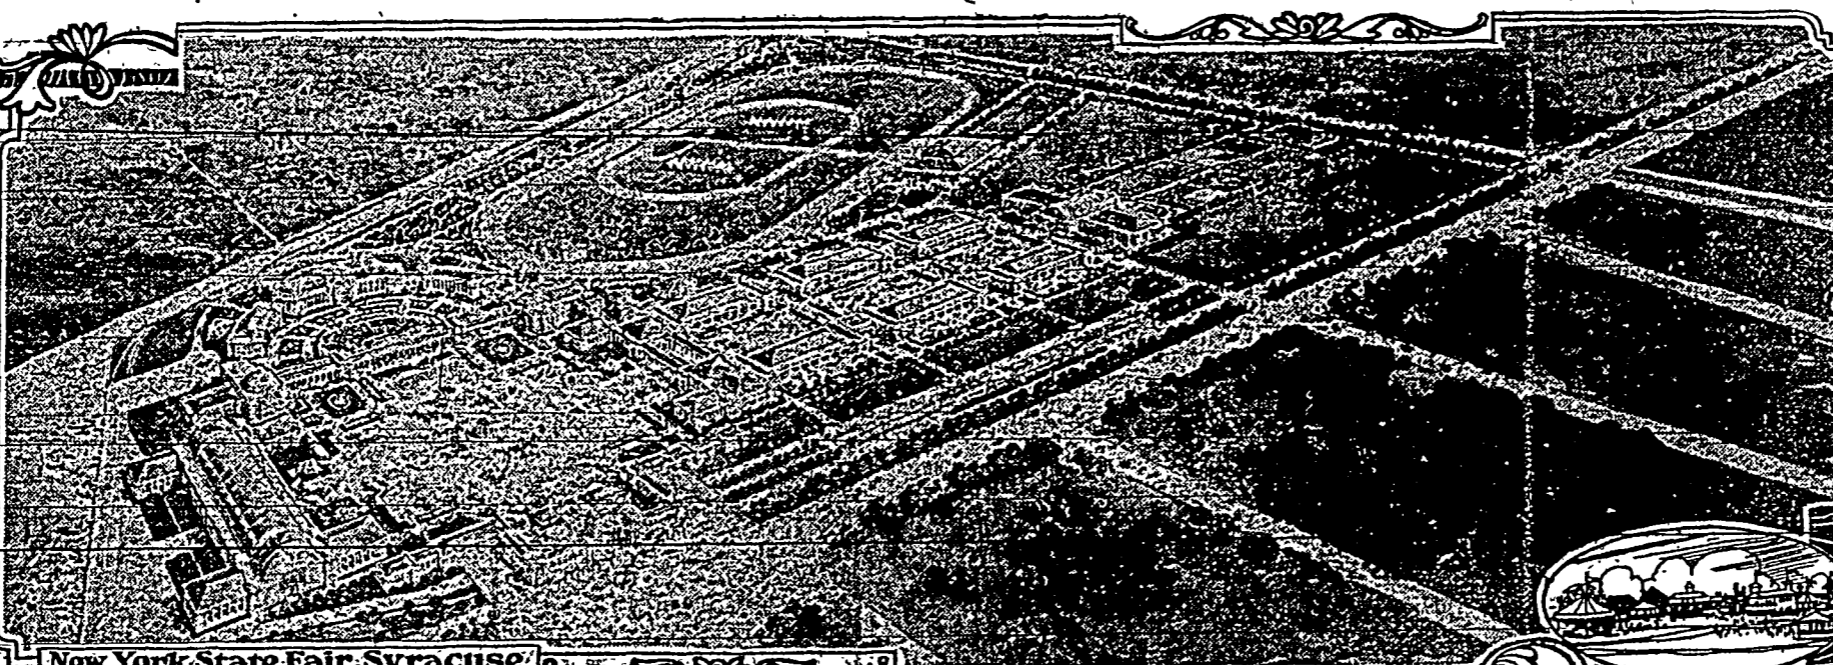

Even after securing an ideal location at Syracuse, the 25 agricultural workers of the state, who live the Lake Ontario and the Erie Canal, and the West Shore on the other side, the fair did not come up to the expectations of those who believed the fair had a right to a place with the fairs of western states which cannot boast of the breeding and agricultural interests of New York. So eleven years ago the state was asked to take over the fair plant to place the management with a commission and to give it a fair such as the people of the Empire State had a right to expect.

The fair showed new life right away, but its growth did not come rapid until six years ago. It had been possible by that time to put a system of management in smooth working order, and New Yorkers had come to realize what a state fair really meant to them. The gradual increase in attendance, the variety and character of exhibits and the favor with which special attractions were received no longer left any doubt about the future of New York's annual exposition.

When this year it would appear the Empire State is to have the greatest fair it is fitting that it should be opened by the president of the United States.

General Philosophy

It's when a fellow is full to the brim that he is apt to talk through his hat.

If a man is really as young as he feels it seems a pity he doesn't always look it.

We are told that kind words never die. At any rate they are never talked to death.

A man sometimes falls because he sits quite up to things when they are up to him.

Why He Was Successful

Some said because he had said.

Some because he had said.

Some because of an iron constitution.

Some because of his brazen indifference.

Some said he was a man of fire.

Some called him the salt of the earth.

Some said he was true steel.

And some said it was only because of his father's.

A moment later the caller scrambled down from her chair and tucked Rosette under her arm again.

"I must be getting uneasy about me. Pennington is getting uneasy about me. I left him at home to take care of the children. He's out of work just now and it's real convenient for me. He's just lovely with the children."

"I should think it would be hard on you with such a large family and your husband out of work," said the hostess.

"Oh I keep busy when Mr. Pennington can't get away from me," responded the caller airily. "And he's out of work most of the time. He's such a stupid man."

At Maxim's.

Addison Mizner, the well-known first nighter, praised, at supper at the Cafe de l'Opera in New York, the wit of the Parisienne.

"I met my first Parisienne," said Mr. Mizner, "in a restaurant in the Rue Royale near the Place de la Concorde. She was very beautiful."

How beautiful you are, said the hostess.

"She turned to me with a smile. Then she said, 'I've got something at once to make me blush.'"
