THE DAILY TIMES.

WATERTOWN, SEPT. 22, 1870.

A Man of the Times.

Standing upon the University ground, near the College building at Ithaca, the other day, in company with some other gentlemen, our attention was called to a man walking along the road with an awkward gait, begrimmed with dust, his coat slung over his shoulder and hurrying forward as if he had some important errand to accomplish. The first impression on seeing the man would be that he was some laborer or mechanic hurrying to his work. On approaching us, Mr. White, the President of the university, introduced the gentleman as Mr. Goldwin Smith, the eminent English scholar and Professor. He stated that he had been taking a bit of exercise during the morning, having walked in from Dryden, some eleven miles. "It does one good to stir the blood," you know, he remarked, in reference to that little bit of exercise. He said the only difficulty in the way of his indulging in the luxury of beer, was the fact that our summers are very hot and our winters very cold, and these extremes prevent his gratifying his desire in the matter as he otherwise would. Mr Smith is a plain, outspoken man, frank in his manner, cordial in his friendships, and enthusiastic in behalf of the cause of education, to which he is devoting his great abilities. He has something of the English cut in his appearance, a little of the English intonation in his speech, but he talks right on in a quiet, unpretending way, always pointed, sensible and instructive. He has his faults, no doubt, and we have seen in his public course in this country, some evidence of what has seemed to us to be mistaken judgment. But these are never to be thought of to his prejudice, when we consider his bold and noble stand in behalf of the integrity of our Union during the great trial days of the Republic. How he stood up in his own country, and courageously confronted the aristocracy, in vindicating the cause of our then bleeding country! For this he was persecuted and contemned, the aristocratic snobs were set upon him and did their worst to crush him. But Goldwin Smith never flinched an inch in the consistent support of Republican principles, nor wavered a moment in defending the right. And when the war was over and peace came again, we cannot forget that Mr. Smith, abandoning the luxuries and endearments of home, came to this country and volunteered his time and counsel and severest labors to aid in the establishment of a University in the New that shall rival the proudest in the Old World. And so, as we parted with this man we felt like saying, when grasping his hand, "God bless you, Goldwin Smith"—Troy Times.

An Infernal Mistake.

"Many a shaft at random sent" hits something or other which the archer little meant to touch. We have heard an anecdote illustrative of this truth which has probably not appeared in print before, and which has been told us as a genuine history. It happened in a large city—never mind what city.

There were two pretty sisters who had married, one an eminent lawyer, the other a distinguished literary man. Literary man dies, and leaves young sister a widow.

Some years rolled away, and the widow lays aside her weeds. Now, then, it happens that a certain author and critic has occasion on a broiling day in summer to call on the eminent lawyer-husband of the elder sister. He finds the lawyer pleading and sweltering in a crowded court, sees that the lawyer is suffering dreadfully from the heat, pities him, rejoices that he himself is not a lawyer, and goes for a cool saunter under the sheltering trees of a fashionable park and garden.

Among the ice-eating, fanning crowd there, he meets the younger of the two sisters, and for a moment thinks he is talking to the elder.

"Oh, Mr. ——," said the lady, "how dreadfully hot it is here!"

"Yes, madame," replies our luckless critic, "it is hot here; but I can assure you the heat of this place is n't a circumstance when compared with the heat of the place where your poor dear husband is suffering to day."

A horror-stricken expression comes over the face of the lady; she rises from her chair and flounces indignantly away.

"Ah, me miserable," soliloquizes our wretched critic, "I've been mistaking the one sister for the other, and she thinks I meant to say that her husband is—not in heaven."

Manufacture of Teeth.

It is stated that three millions of teeth are made in this country alone. The first operation, according to the method of manufacture pursued by one of the most extensive and celebrated establishments, is the choosing of the materials. These are feldspar, silica and clay. To these are added various metallic oxides to produce any shade or color desired. The feldspar clay, &c. are ground to an impalpable powder under water, dried and made into paste. That composing the body of the tooth is of different material from that composing the base or enamel. The teeth are made in brass molds, and this is quite a delicate process. The enamel is first put in place with a small steel spatula; the platinum rivets, by which the teeth are fastened to the plate are put into position and then the body is pressed into the mold. They are then submitted to a powerful pressure and dried.

After they are dried they are submitted to a process called biscuiting, in which they can be cut like chalk. They are then sent to the trimmers, who scrape off all projections and fill up all depressions which have been left in the operation of molding, and then wash them with what is technically termed enamel. This is composed of various substances, more fusible than the tooth itself, and answers the glaze in common porcelain making. It is ground to a fine powder and suspended in water, and is laid on with a cammels hair brush. They are now sent to the gummers who apply the gum. This is chiefly composed of oxide of gold, and is applied in the same manner as the enamel. After being dried they are burned. This operation is carried on in a muffle. The teeth are placed on a bed of crushed quartz which is placed on a slab of stiff clay. After being exposed from an intense heat for some hours, they are taken out, cobbled and assorted.

MINNESOTA;
Its Resources and Progress—Its beauty Healthfulness and Fertility, and its Attractions and Advantages as a home for Immigrants.—A new book Free of Cost, compiled from official sources and published by direction of Governor Horace Austin.
In a convenient and readable form it exhibits the inducements offered by Minnesota to persons seeking homes, and includes official statistics illustrative of the marvelous growth and development of that young, vigorous and healthy State.
Other publications to attract immigrants usually deal in indiscriminate puffery and grossly exaggerated statements. This gives a candid statement of facts, derived chiefly from the State Bureau Statistics and otherwise supported by scientific and disinterested testimony of the most incontestable character.
After a short geographical and historical sketch, showing the central position of the State and the events of its young history, follows a description of its beauty and fertility from the testimony of high military and literary authorities; an exhibit of mineral resources; a description of its beautiful lakes, rivers, timber, game and fish; a dissertation on the climate, illustrating its marvelous healthfulness and adaptability to agriculture, shows how the cultivated area grew from 1,401 acres in 1850, to 1,600,000 acres in 1870, with a surplus of 14,000,000 bushels of wheat for export; gives tables of comparison, proving officially that Minnesota excels Iowa and Ohio in her average product of wheat and all other staples except corn; shows a more ample and effective water power than all New England, and that, while not a tithe of this power is yet used, the extent and value of manufacture has increased 945 per cent in 6 years.
The book also shows the value and importance of the lumbering interest, commercial resources and progress, railroads constructed and projected, including the North Pacific—already energetically pushed forward—the amazing development of its common schools from thirteen districts, five schools and 329 scholars in 1851, to 2,863 districts, 1,020 school houses and 102,096 scholars in 1869—progress in population in which she is shown to have outstripped all her sisters. Due attention is given to political and social institutions, governments, taxation, value of property, distribution and wealth, improvement of farms, exemption laws, law of descent, legal practice, statistics of charitable institutions, poor, post offices, newspapers, religion, Sunday Schools, Masons, Odd Fellows, &c.
It concludes with a chapter on "Public Lands, how and where to get them," shows the amount of unoccupied lands, how to obtain "free farms," gives the location of the government land offices, describes the different classes of public lands and the several modes and costs of obtaining them under the homestead laws, by pre emption, &c., with suggestions as to the manner and cost of starting farms, when to commence, what money can do, what pluck and muscle may do—wages, employment, and who should come to the State—affording, in short, all such information as emigrants most need.
Part of the edition is accompanied with an excellent map, showing the character of the different locations, &c.
This book will be sent to any address in America or Europe, free of postage or other expense, on application to E PAGE DAVIS, Commissioner of Immigration for the State of Minnesota, No. 186 Broadway, New York, where all information in regard to the State will be cheerfully given. sep6 4w
