STARGELL makes on first try

BY JIM BRESSET

NEW YORK — Willie Stargell, who inspired the Pittsburgh Pirates to their World Series title last year with his power and pride, on Tuesday became the 17th player in National League history to hit four home runs in a game.

Stargell, the 24-year-old giant who fueled with seven of the nine hits the Pirates put up, said he was "too happy to be nervous." He said he was "too happy to be nervous."

"I was just too happy to be nervous," he said. "I was too happy to be nervous." He said he was "too happy to be nervous."

In the decisive seventh game at Baltimore, Stargell hit two home runs in his first three at-bats. It was a strange repeat of history. In 1971, Stargell scored the Pirates’ only run in their World Series victory over the Orioles.

That 1971 performance, in which Stargell hit two home runs, was the first of his four-game total. He was the greatest. He was dropping from the sky.

Clemente, who hit a single in the 1971 World Series (Oct. 14, 15, 1972) followed suit and later that year scored two runs. At the age of 25, he was the greatest. He was dropping from the sky.

It was another disappointing year, however, for the Pirates, who were in serious trouble in the seventh inning. The Pirates scored three runs in the seventh inning to pull ahead, 4-3, in the fourth inning. But nothing went right from then on.

"We had the size advantage," said Stargell, "but we didn't have the composure." He said he had the size advantage," but he didn't have the composure.

"We were not going to full-speed with anybody," he said. "We were not going to full-speed with anybody." He said he had the size advantage," but he didn't have the composure.

"We have excelled in the clutch," said Stargell, "and we have been consistent in the clutch." He said he had the size advantage," but he didn't have the composure.

"We were not going tofull-speed with anybody," he said. "We were not going tofull-speed with anybody." He said he had the size advantage," but he didn't have the composure.
