Nelson Mandela says sanctions should stay

By TOM COHEN

DURBAN, South Africa (AP) — Nelson Mandela, newly elected president of the African National Congress and Sunday's main international economic sanctions against South Africa should remain.

But he urged the nations' leading black opposition group to show "flexibility and imagination" as many foreign countries lift the punitive measures to reward President F.W. de Klerk's government for the adoption of the last major apartheid law.

Mandela, elevated from the ANC's No. 2 post to its presidency Friday, spoke on the final day of the group's Weekend National Conference, which has considered policies on key issues such as sanctions, township violence and the national elections.

An estatutary rally that drew 30,000 people to a soccer stadium Sunday afternoon. Mandela said the conference is most representative and has greater authority than the illegitimate Parliament.

Mandela's Africa 30 million black majority is excluded from Parliament.

While no major policy changes emerged, the ANC said it would negotiate on a black-white power-sharing constitution if the white authorities meet several demands. They include a greater government effort to end black township violence and the release of all political prisoners.
