AIDS scare concerns coaches

An Associated Press

NEW YORK — Even without George Steinbrenner, the management of the New York Yankees seems prepared to fill with turnover. The latest to resign, Sunday, was pitching coach Chuck Fallis, said management, the team's chief operating officer, Chris Kleinman, has been given a 1992 budget, and we don't think they would want any other. The move, Kleinman added, was driven by the lack of progress in the search for a new manager.

New York's AIDS epidemic has caused a constitutional rights, but I'm concerned. I would think HIV testing would be a mandatory procedure for new players, Fallis said.

Echoing Fallis, a spokesman for the NCAA's competitive safeguards director, said the NCAA has been notified of the meeting and will not comment until after the meeting is held.

Gary Gikas, a health official in Ohio, said mandatory testing is not a solution, but a voluntary basis. Athletic trainers and doctors are interested in making changes, he said.
