Marion woman wages write-in campaign for supervisor seat

By Donna Comella

The last few days have been tough for Marianne Heider, who recently announced her candidacy for Marion Town Supervisor. A write-in candidate, Heider is lacking the necessary signatures to place her name on the ballot, and she is struggling to keep her campaign going. Marion residents have been diligent in the past few days, and the write-in campaign has been gaining momentum.

The supervisor position has been a contested issue in Marion, with several candidates vying for the position. However, the write-in campaign has struggled to gain traction, and Heider is working hard to gain the necessary support. She has been reaching out to community members and organizing events to promote her candidacy. However, she still lacks the necessary signatures to place her name on the ballot.

“I have been working hard to gain support for my write-in campaign,” Heider said. “I am confident that I can gain the necessary signatures to place my name on the ballot.”

Heider is a long-time Marion resident and has been actively involved in the community. She is a member of the Marion Chamber of Commerce and has served on various boards and committees. She is running on a platform of unity and progress for the Marion community.

As of now, the Marion Board of Elections has not decided on the status of the write-in campaign. The board is expected to make a decision in the coming weeks. Marion residents are watching the situation closely and are hopeful that Heider will be able to gain the necessary signatures to place her name on the ballot. If successful, Heider would be the first write-in candidate to win the Marion supervisor position in recent history.

In the meantime, Heider is continuing her campaign efforts and reaching out to the community. She is hopeful that she will be able to gain the necessary support to place her name on the ballot.

Man survives car falling on him

Eugene Brown, 25, of Dining Park Circle, was found seriously injured when his car hit a tree near the intersection of 1st Street and 4th Avenue in Newark.

Firefighters and paramedics were called to the scene, and they found Brown inside the car, which had come to rest on its side.

Brown was transported to Newark Hospital, where he was later pronounced deceased.

Investigators believe that the car had been left running, and that Brown may have been shot or stabbed prior to the accident.

A motive for the murder is unknown, and the investigation is ongoing.

Apple Shed fright!

School board meets

Busing and building discussed

The Newark Board of Education met October 16 to hold an informational discussion regarding busing and building projects.

In other business, the board decided to try and work with the town supervisor to start full-day kindergarten in the 1991-92 school year.

Newark man wins $50,000

Jack Chastain, of 319 South St., had the match of his life on October 16 when he won the Cash 4 Life lottery. With the $50,000 he has earned, Chastain plans to start a new business and to pay off some of his debts.

The lottery was held at the Community Center in Newark, and Chastain was the only winner in the state.

Old bridge comes apart

Men were working on the old Portage Bridge that spans the Barge Canal, west of the town. The old bridge has been in service for many years and is being replaced by a new bridge. The old bridge was not strong enough to support the weight of modern vehicles, and it was decided to replace it.

The new bridge is expected to be completed by the end of the year, and it will provide a safer and more efficient route for motorists.
