Restored To Vigorous Health By "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

CHAS. F. HARTWELL South Royalton, Vermont. "About three years ago I began to suffer with indigestion. Food soured in my stomach, causing me to belch; and I had terrible heart burn, with pains in my chest and arms. My heart became affected, I had shortness of breath; the action of my kidneys was irregular, the secretions scanty and scalding.

I was knocked out, and good for nothing, when I read about "Fruit-a-tives" and sent for a box. I used a few and thought, "well, they will turn out like all the other remedies I have tried" but to my surprise and gladness, I noticed improvement and I continued the use of "Fruit-a-tives" (or Fruit Liver Tablets) with the result that a dozen boxes made me feel like a different person."

BRIDGING A CHASM

By STANLEY WARNER (Copyright, 1920, Western Newspaper Union)

"Silas Manton has sent me word that he would like to have a talk with you about that wood lot you have squabbled about for the last five years."

"Thus Alex Brown, local attorney, to his client, High Briston. The latter, snuff, heard bristling, wrathful of voice and manner was not at all responsive to the suggestion. "Does, eh?" he snorted. "The he is either weakening on his grandstand or has something up his sleeve. In either case I won't run after him. Let him come to me if he has any proposition to make."

"Manton is quite as stubborn as yourself," explained the attorney. "Here you have litigated, never speaking to one another, since you had your first quarrel. You've got to give in to me, Briston. It's for your own interests."

"I won't," asserted his client emphatically. "I wouldn't step on his ground for a fortune. He has penned me in so I couldn't get out my chopping. He has spotted two good sales."

"Well, Manton wants to tender a proposition to adjust matters amicably." "Then he can come and see me, I won't go and see him, that is sure." Lawyer Brown looked nonplused. His mission boded failure. He did not wish to lose a liberal fee, and besides that he wished to see two old-time cronies and later enemies get back to first principles like rational human beings. Again, he had been approached only the day previous by the manly, staid lawyer of High Briston. Sidney had said in his clear, open way, "and you may do me a great favor. I understand that there is some chance of father and Mr. Manton getting together on the subject of their lawsuits. It means a lot to me if they do, and to Eunice also," added Sidney, a slight flush coming to his cheeks. "You needn't say anything, Sidney," replied Brown. "How you have kept your attentions to pretty Eunice from the knowledge of her father and your own I shall not inquire, but I shall now do double duty in trying to heat the breach between two fire eaters."

And now, recalling his promise to Sidney, the lawyer observed to the father: "Well, I suppose you won't object Manton half way?" "What do you mean by half way?" growled Briston suspiciously. "I wouldn't cross his threshold for a fortune, and I'm sure he hates every stick and stone about my place."

"Oh, well, I may be able to think out some method by which you two stubborn old men may meet, without either of you feeling that you have lowered your dignity, or given in."

It was two days later when Lawyer Brown called upon High Briston. "Well," he remarked briskly, "I've settled it. Manton is agreeable to the half-way proposition."

"There's the old foot bridge crossing the river that winds in at the rear of your respective holdings. He'll be there at nine o'clock tomorrow morning. Now then, be sensible and lunatic. Your principal source of anxiety is the wood-lot thoroughfare. His is the new road. Give in if he does; shake hands, be friends and bury the hatchet."

"He'll make the first advances," menaced Briston. "If he don't, you're wasting our time."

The old bridge spanned a creek grown into river volume during recent spring rains, and on account of a new structure nearer the main traversed road and especially since the feud between Manton and Briston, it had fallen into disuse. At precisely nine o'clock the next morning Silas Manton advanced from his own land and carelessly lounged against the railing at the center of the decayed structure. Briston approached from his side. As he stepped upon the planking the weakened timbers creaked. Both were heavy men. With a crash the whole rotten structure gave way. Amid snapping timbers the two butty enemies went down into mad stream.

"I can't swim," yelled Manton thoroughly frightened as the eddy current began to bear him down stream. "No more can I," announced Briston. "I guess we're a-goner. Here, grab the end of the plank I'm holding onto, Hi there, oh Sidney! Get us out!" For Sidney suddenly emerged into view from a near shore thicket without his father even suspecting that he had purposely stationed himself there to watch the bridge negotiations. "You first," spoke the politic Sidney, and sprung into the water and towed Manton ashore. "Now then, take it easy," he added to his father, performing the same operation for him. "Say, Briston," spluttered Manton, "I reckon we're a pair of fools. Suppose we'd drowned! That wood lot nuisance—have it your way." "And about the road strip," said Briston. "I'll sign up for the right-of-way. Hey, Sidney!" But Sidney was gone, on wings of feet, to seek out anxious, compassionate Eunice and report that the family feud was settled at last.
