SALOONS WITHOUT AN OWNER.

Some Curious Ways of Beating the Excise Law as Practiced on Staten Island.

A curious and complicated excise case is under police investigation, the details of which, so far as known, are about as follows:

On Saturday night, June 4th, a raid was made on a licensed saloon in West Brighton. Six men, a woman, and the bar-tender were arrested.

On the following Monday the prisoners were arraigned before Magistrate Handy. Five of the men were sentenced to the county jail for six months, the sixth was fined $7, and the bartender held in $1,000 bail for the Court of Sessions.

All efforts to locate the owner of the place were futile. The license is in the name of a woman and is numbered 19,581.

The bartender said he never saw the proprietress and does not know her, the excise commissioner, who gave the license, only knows that such a license was granted, the brewery that supplied the beer professed ignorance of the woman's whereabouts, and the officers of the law said she was as hard to find as last year's snow.

The police, when asked why they wanted her, said they had evidence against the place as a disorderly house but could not use it against anyone except the owner. After two weeks' search they located the person to whom the license had been granted, only to find they had their search for nothing. The woman, who is respectable, lived within four doors of the brewery, and disposed of whatever interest she had in the place last year, and has never been within five miles of it since. The bartender is back on the job and the police say there is no use raiding that place, for no matter how much evidence they get, it cannot be used.

A patrolman who is not anxious to get his name in the paper said of this affair: "There are lots of cases like this on Staten Island, and what can you do? A license costs money, many of them $500. The brewer has to pay this and a lot more, besides supplying beer, and they get their money back in weekly installments. The barkeep gets a nominal salary and a percentage on his sales. Some of them 'knock down.' This is honest graft—with them. But there is no money in it, only a bare living, and very often hardly that.

"So they sometimes quit trying to do a straight business and run a disorderly house. They have nothing to lose and whatever they make is theirs. It's a bad business and the Italians who come down from the city are the worst offenders. You might say the brewers could stop it, but they'd lose money. The license has to be paid for in advance and it's $10 a week for that alone.

"A good many places and some of the worst ones, mentioned the narrator, 'are owned by people who don't live here at all. I don't know how it is done, for of course it's against the law, but it is done, and I can't help thinking the brewers know a good deal about it. The worst thing about the whole business is the ruin it is causing among young girls. If people knew what the police know something would be done quick about it.'

The new law which limits the number of saloons to one for 750 inhabitants is going to hit the brewers hard. Staten Island has more than its proportion and it goes without saying that no new ones can be started. It is a fact that there are many places running that ought to be suppressed, and things are shaping up so that many of them will have to go. The case in West Brighton may be the means of opening the eyes of the authorities to some of the tricks of the trade.

Whose Boy?

The police of the 61st precinct, West Brighton, have a mystery on their hands—a little boy that Patrolman Decker found wandering about the vicinity of Jewett avenue and Bennett street, Port Richmond, before daylight on Wednesday morning.

The lad is about 9 years old, neatly attired in a gray baseball suit, patent-leather tics and black stockings. He said his name was Bert Morgan, and that he lived on Cherry Lane. An officer took him there, but the boy said "This don't look like the place," and then a trip was made to Jewett avenue with a like result. The boy then said something about 116 Sixth avenue, Bayonne, and the police of that city were communicated with, and made an investigation with no better result. On Thursday the boy was taken to the rooms of the S. P. C. C.

ARTHUR F. MOSELY'S FAREWELL

Secretary of the Army Y. M. C. A. Takes Leave of His Friends at Fort Wadsworth.

Arthur F. Mosely, secretary of the Y. M. C. A. at Fort Wadsworth for the past three years, was tendered a farewell reception on Tuesday evening on the eve of his departure for a new field of usefulness in the West. It was a tribute of respect and esteem of which he may well feel proud.

The Y. M. C. A. room was well filled, and among those present were Mrs. Haan, wife of the commandant of the Fort. Major Haan expected to be present and make an address, but was unexpectedly called away and sent a letter of regret. Lieut. Beardsley and several other officers and their wives, the pastors of various Staten Island churches and members of Co. E, Boys' Brigade, of which Secretary Mosely is captain.

The exercises opened with the singing of familiar hymns followed by prayer by Mr. Sanford and Scripture reading by Rev. Mr. Everard. Mrs. Mosely, by request, sang a solo, and then Secretary Mosely delivered a farewell address. In speaking of his work he said that this was his fourth honorable discharge from the army and expressed his hope that some day he might get back again. The work among the soldiers at the Fort he said, had its ups and downs, but on the whole had met with a large measure of success, and he had faith to believe that it would grow. He expressed his sincere thanks for help rendered by Commandant and Mrs. Haan and other officers and ladies of the Post, by the clergymen of the local churches, and by the committee of management.

Mr. Beardsley, as chairman of the committee, spoke of the good work accomplished by the secretary and hoped to see him back some day. George A. Sanford, Army Secretary for the Harbor Y. M. C. A. said Mr. Mosely would be missed in the Army Branch work, and that any time he wished to get back his place would be open for him.

Mrs. Mosely was then recalled to the platform and asked to say a few words. She said she was sorry to leave the Fort as she loved the work, and she was a soldier's wife and had to obey orders.

Rev. Geo. C. Lemmon voiced his personal regrets at the departure of Mr. Mosely also of Brighton Heights Church and of Co. E of the Boys' Brigade which had been organized and captained by the Secretary. Private James spoke for the soldiers and said as some was a matter of personal regret with all, for Secretary Mosely had been a good friend to every one of them.

Rev. J. B. J. Rhodes of Kingsley M. E. Church spoke for his own and other churches. He talked of the wonderful meetings held by Mr. Mosely and his comrades in his own and other churches on the Island. He said they had always been helpful and expressed regret that they were not to have more of them.

Others would have spoken but as the hour was getting late Mr. Mosely brought the meeting to a close and in doing so expressed his heartfelt thanks for the appreciation of his efforts manifested in the reception.
