DIGESTION. [Believing as we do, that our house-keepers are largely responsible for the health of the household, and that their intelligence concerning the destination and effect of the food they cook is as important as their knowledge of making victuals edible, we clip the following from the American Agriculturist.—Eds. Adv.]

REMEMBER—1st. That before food can be of any benefit to the body, it must be dissolved in the stomach, so that it can be absorbed into the blood in a liquid state, and be thus carried to the parts of the body needing to be supplied with nutriment.

2d. That nothing should go into the stomach which has not first been masticated, (chewed) in a manner which will reduce it to a fine state before it is taken into the mouth, so that it can be easily dissolved.

3d. That the saliva of the mouth mixed with the food, greatly aids the dissolving or digestion of the food in the stomach, and that even soft food should be chewed or worked over in the mouth, until well mixed with saliva.

4th. That children cannot appreciate the importance of masticating food, and that great care should be taken, either to see that they do masticate it well, or that it be so thoroughly prepared for them that it can not go into the stomach in an undigestible form.

5th. That as all food after going into the stomach must either be properly digested, or produce injurious results, it is the height of folly to crowd down into the stomach two or three quarts of food and drink, and expect that organ to work it all up readily.

6th. That the sleep is far more quiet and refreshing, if the stomach sleeps with the rest of the body, and that it is better to eat nothing which cannot be digested before retiring to rest.

7th. That the stomach keeps at work while it has any undissolved food in it, and that if you "tunch" or "piece" to rest, and it will in time be weakened if it do not give out.

8th. That sleep is far more quiet and refreshing, if the stomach sleeps with the rest of the body, and that it is better to eat nothing which cannot be digested before retiring to rest.
