BEER AND COFFEE

Once more have the experts been confounded. The advent of beer has done some of the things its advocates claimed it would do and perhaps some of the things its opponents predicted, but it has not adversely affected consumption of our national breakfast and dinner drink, coffee.

Not a few men engaged in the coffee trade were fearful last spring that authorized sale of 3.2 alcoholic brew would mean harm to their business because it would be substituted to a great extent as a mealtime beverage. The New York coffee and sugar exchange shows that all such prognostications were wrong and that consumption of coffee has increased since April 7.

Deliveries of coffee in September totaled 1,029,000 bags, each weighing 132 pounds. This was an increase of 246,000 bags, or 32,472,000 pounds, over the corresponding month in 1932. For three months ended September 30 deliveries were 2,879,000 bags as against 2,527,000 in the corresponding period of the preceding year.

By congressional definition beer of 3.2 per cent is not intoxicating and there are many drinkers who claim it is minus the expected kick, but whatever may be its stimulating effects in this regard, it may be set down as a stimulator and accelerator of coffee sales.

The inference to be drawn is that the average American may like a sip of beer with a cold bite, but when it comes to hot food he finds satisfaction in a cup or two of Java that comes with no substitute.

GOOD ROADS PROGRAM

J. Newton Byers, Jr., president of the New York State Automobile

Association, has announced that his organization will support the request made by the State Legislature of the Federal Government for the $10,000,000 appropriation for farm-to-market roads in New York State.

Commenting on this proposed appropriation, George C. Diehl, chairman of the Good Roads Committee of the New York State Automobile Association, says:

"A determined effort is being made by Governor Lehman and the State Government at this time to get the Federal Government to appropriate a large sum of money with which it will be possible to improve materially a large part of the present dirt road mileage in this state.

"This effort to get the farmer out of the mud will not only improve the status of agriculture materially but will do a whole lot to relieve unemployment. The program once completed would be of a permanent nature and it is one that the organized motorists of this state can well support.

"Many motorists today no longer like to confine their travel entirely to the main routes. In many cases, one can find recreation and increased safety by using a well paved country road rather than some principal artery. We, therefore, believe that this proposed farm-to-market program would not only benefit the farmer but the general motoring public and would have a pronounced tendency to decrease traffic on congested highways."

Knights of Pythias Protest Statement

The New York Times says: Senator Kaplan also announced that the Grand Lodge of the Knights of Pythias of the Domain of New York had protested the characterization of Samuel Untermyer as "public Enemy No. 1" by George V. McLaughlin, McKee campaign manager. Mr. Untermyer is chairman of the fraternal division of the lodge, according to Mr. Kaplan.

Mr. Kaplan is campaign manager for Mayor O'Brien, Tammany candidate.

Public Ownership

ing loans from public works funds. This policy was outlined in a letter to Mr. Hugh Miller, state engineer for Missouri, which in effect instructed state officials to hasten applications for loans for utilities projects without undue delay to hear protests from private interests.

As indication of the policy, Mr. Ickes pointed out that $4,845,700 has already been allocated for five power projects and $20,164,602 for 100 waterworks by the PWA.

The fight between the Administration and private utilities, which was joined when President Roosevelt threw his support behind Senator Norris in his fight for public development of power at Muscle Shoals, is not being ignored by private interests. Although accepting the complete commitment of the present Administration as irrevocable, they are nevertheless busy laying the groundwork for the future when they hope that a turn in political fortunes will resurrect the respectability of private ownership.

An example of their continued activity, in the face of the Administration's complete commitment to the other side of the case, was provided by the American Engineering Council in session here. A resolution adopted yesterday questioned the wisdom of "governmental competition," and asked the PWA to announce a policy of opposing loans to finance competitive service.

Can You Recall - -

Can you recall again Henry W. Ferguson, who commenced his business life (in a designing way) as a dry goods clerk and ended it (resigned and saved) running a wet goods place, along where my friend Felix Boyer has got his! As I said before some place, Mr. Ferguson and my father were cronies. They were both just Irish enough for that, and one of the twain would sit on one side of the brass rail and the other, the other, 'cause both had cold feet. They are both dead now, poor things, and I have got to scabble, as I did before. "Ferg" at one time used to own (and keep grocery in) the building on Ford street where J. F. Ferris got his start before cutting his sprouts and moving to the corner store he occupies now—strange to say where "Ferg" moved out of on purchasing the other site, Louis I. Hoffman, my old protegee, "also ran" the corner where Mr. Ferris is. I can recall "Ferg" helping to obtain my father's consent for me to attend a cock fight at Prescott junction, when I was a boy working for my father at 50c per, and that uncertain! "Ferg" insisted that the social advantages attached were elevating in themselves aside from the more childish sport of watching spurred roosters try to, and succeed, in scratching each other's eyes out! Canada was always socially inclined and Prescott in particular. Prescott never needed any policemen!—just one chief police—because there was no work in his line, or in fact any "chiefs" side, in any line! Well, on the day of the cock-fight Prescott's council held a meeting (behind closed doors, same like Ogdensburg, and the chief police, carte blanche received, to send the whole force to the junction, that the force could see at second sight (after the "white-wheat") what there was to avoid, and knock down to mother earth any person interfering with the poultry dispute. The meeting only required a few moments as any council meeting should, where there are no Republicans nor Democrats, and only true manhood exists.

Can you recall some familiar spots in Prescott way back? The Revere House when John Huntington was prop'r and old Jimmie McAuley was chief dispenser? When Pat Fitzsimmons was clerk and who afterward ran hotel here where Richard Dunn, a retired city hackman, larded it over? Can you go back to when Timothy Larkin kept store on this corner?

But I have left Prescott! Can you recall the old Queens Hotel when John Brunning was host? Can you recall when George Steacy a prominent carpenter of those days, who lived on Morris street this city, married Mr. Brunning's wife's sister? How the wedding festivities took place in the season for "Tom and Jerry" and good-natured Mr. Brunning made ample for all the guests? One of them, liking a practical joke even better than the toddy, dropped enough salt in the batch to sicken a mule and they had to turn again to "plain stuff"! Can you recall Mrs. Chartier's pigeon-hole table in a building on Water street near the market. The underground passage at the old fort? Mickie Flynn's place? Joe Eithers' barber shop? "Yes, I know there is! but there is no space to tell you more now!"
