POETRY.

A Wife to Her Husband.
(After the recent death of the wife of General McQuade a slip was found in her purse by one of her daughters, containing the following beautiful poem.)
One of us, dear—
But one—
Will sit by a bed with a marvellous fear,
And clasp a hand,
Growing cold as it feels for the spirit land—
Daring, which one?
One of us, dear—
But one—
Will stand by the other's coffin tier,
And look and weep,
While those marble tips strange silence keep—
Daring, which one?
One of us, dear—
But one—
By an open grave will drop a tear,
And feel the anguish of an unshared grief to know—
Daring, which one?
One of us, dear, it may be;
It may be you will slip from me;
Or perhaps, who may just be done—
Which one?
