

MR. AND MRS. JACOB VONCLOSS, their son and daughter, Caleb and Polly, their granddaughters, Arvilla, Betsey and Eva, Joshua Lincoln, their adopted orphan boy, and the twins David and Daniel, invite you to visit their 1872 country home in the Gouverneur Library Molly Maguire, the hired girl and Herkimer Palaski, the hired man will welcome you also. Your children may meet Outlaw, the spaniel, the mama cat, Lovey, and the naughty kittens, Tabby Tacklepacher and Timmie Ticklepacher. Snatcher, the bashful mouse who lives under the kitchen range, may appear too. Unfortunately, you won't be able to see Daniel. He has a slight cold and will be asleep in the old cradle under the crazy quilt coverlet. He has an onion bag at his throat and Goose grease and red flannel on his chest. Be assured his cold isn't 'ketchin'. Do come. Merry Christmas to all.

Clarkson College plans to widen perspective

The future mission of Clarkson College of Technology is highlighted in the recently published 1971-72 Chancellor's Report, by Dr. John W. Graham, Jr.

In the report, Chancellor Graham noted that for 75 years, the traditional view has been that the College would best meet the needs and wants of society by limiting its fields of specialization to engineering and closely allied fields.

"But the time has come," the Chancellor wrote, "in the view of a number of our faculty as well as myself, to widen our perspective so as to attract increasing numbers of a new kind of student—one who is concerned about today's technological problems and likes the kind of environment which Clarkson provides, but doesn't want what appears to him to be a stereotyped program with little opportunity for the kind of flexibility he wants."

Dr. Graham pointed out that the Clarkson General Catalog for 1972-74 outlines more than 25 optional programs, many of them being interdisciplinary, which students may elect as areas of concentrated study.

These programs include such areas as biomedical and biomechanical engineering, computer engineering, environmental engineering and pollution control, human resource development, industrial engineering and marketing, management science, and nuclear engineering. He added that Clarkson has introduced in 1972 a new degree, Bachelor of Professional Studies, for students who wish to take advantage of the College's offerings to design their own academic programs to meet specific career objectives.

The Chancellor also discussed the short-term as well as the long-range future of Clarkson College. He said that the Master Plan which was formulated and published in January, 1969, is consistent with present plans. It anticipates a growth in undergraduate enrollment to 3,000 and graduate enrollment to 500 by 1990.

He explained that the College has retained that objective in the face of declining enrollments because its current physical facilities, which have been steadily expanded over the past two decades, can serve a student population of 3,500 and because "we believe that state and federal plans for higher education should call for the full utilization of existing private college capacity before additional public capacity is provided."

The plan anticipates four things: (1) that students are available in the numbers projected who can be attracted to Clarkson College; (2) that the tuition rates can be increased regularly without destroying the College's competitive position; (3) that gift and grant income will be obtained in amounts necessary to close the gap between expenditures and all other sources of income; and (4) that the projected growth in the graduate area can and will be financed entirely from outside funds.

Dr. Graham predicts that engineering, and education for it, will see still further changes in the decade of the seventies. "Where in the past we may have been guilty of doing too much engineering for engineering's sake, increasing attention must now be given to a broader role," he said. "Clarkson, if it wishes, has the opportunity to adopt and stress a new image, that of a college of technology and man."

Chancellor Graham stressed the College's strong support of the recommendations included in the 1972 Statewide Master Plan for Private Colleges and Universities of the State of New York which was published in June 1972, by the State Commission on Independent Colleges and Universities.

He said, "We are especially hopeful that the State Legislature and the Governor will see eye to eye with the Board of Regents concerning the need for special financial consideration for the private engineering schools, whose programs are more costly than most other programs in higher education. The Commission recommends that the principle of categorical aid be reaffirmed and that the State's

SUC Potsdam reorganizes

The recent reorganization of State University College at Potsdam into three schools marks a significant step in the college's attempt to meet all the needs of the leaders of the future, according to the new dean of liberal studies, Dr. Richard E. Hutcheson.

Noting that "there is no place for a single-track policy in any viable educational institution in the next 20 years," Dr. Hutcheson said the School of Liberal Studies of which he is dean, will work in unity with the School of Education and the Crane School of Music to provide all of the college's students with the best-rounded education possible.

Dr. Hutcheson observed that, while the college is still vitally interested in preparing effective teachers, it is now, more than ever, truly a college of arts and sciences as opposed to a "normal school."

He said the college is interested in seeing to it that even those who are specializing in a particular field have a broad education because

"We want to prepare liberally educated men and women for the leadership positions which will open up in the 21st Century."

"That society will not need more narrowly trained specialists," he said. "That is the antithesis of the future of man. In that sort of society people are no more than drones."

Personally familiar with just about every kind of institution of higher education, Dr. Hutcheson received his M.A. and Ph.D. degrees in philosophy at Harvard University and has since held teaching and administrative positions at a women's college, an all-male college, a small private liberal arts college, a large state university and a technical college.

He came to his current position from the chairmanship of the philosophy department at Clarkson College of Technology, where he was responsible for establishing a philosophy curriculum compatible with the technical curricula.

He said he sees his role as dean of liberal studies at State University College at Potsdam as that of focusing the efforts of the faculty within the School of Liberal Studies.

"My predecessors did an excellent job of recruiting the quality of faculty and resources we need to move toward our goal," Dr. Hutcheson said. "Now we have to deal with the academically philosophical considerations."

Outlining what such considerations are, he said, "The school of liberal studies will emphasize academic excellence through an educationally daring but intellectually demanding curriculum."

"We have to move into the position of meeting the needs of a very diverse, transient, mobile student body with its different goals. This will require a variety of means of meeting these goals."

Eighteen distinct departments comprise State University College at Potsdam's School of Liberal Studies, and Dr. Hutcheson noted that his first major effort is establishing a viable organizational structure.

When this is completed, he said, the school will move into the development and defining of new curricula, experimental programs, and a new calendar.

Dr. Hutcheson said he is convinced that the planned developments of the School of Liberal Studies will have great benefits for all three schools of the college.

"The School of Liberal Studies has the greatest potential for change," he said, "but all three schools will benefit greatly from these changes."

This is true, he said, "because in a tight job market, graduates from the most reputable colleges have the best potential for employment, as well as admission to the better graduate schools."

Born in Washington, D.C. and raised in Alexandria, Va., Dr. Hutcheson was graduated with honors from the College of William and Mary and went to Harvard under a Rockefeller Fellowship.

He has held positions at St. Mary's College in Indiana, Kansas State University, Allegheny College in Pennsylvania, Wofford College in South Carolina and Harvard University, and is a member of numerous professional and fraternal organizations.

Salvation Army continues tradition of serving needy

Lawrence A. Shene of the Clifton-Fine Salvation Army Service Unit Committee has announced that the Annual Christmas Letter asking for funds is being placed in the mail at an early date.

Serving people in need at Christmas is traditional with The Salvation Army. Children of low income families like to have toys and something special for their Christmas dinner. Elderly people and shut-ins, who depend upon someone to care for them, are assisted by The Salvation Army. Men and women in prisons and their families are helped.

Funds are needed to help support its institutions which provide state-wide services such as: homes for unwed mothers, rehabilitation centers for men, prison and parole work, Missing Persons Bureau, services to the Armed Forces, and many other phases of The Salvation Army's spiritually motivated program that extends to 86 countries of the world.
