emphasized that we must have faith and trust in God and Heaven although the modern thinkers tell us that God is "dead." He is not dead, Piskor declared, and neither are those values which enrich and uplift us as individuals.
"We must develop the art of seeing, the art of reason, and the art of thinking. He who learns to see is awakened; he who learns to read is enriched and he who learns to think is emancipated."
"Now what I'm trying to say to you is that if you learn to do all of these, in balance, you become humanized and become real people. You will become the kind of people you want to be," he concluded.
In his remarks, Dr. Piskor cited the fact that "art" is application of hard work and discipline in keeping with a standard set by the "artist." Whether it be a sculpture, a painting, a novel or just plain living, we must apply hard work and discipline in accordance with high standards which we must set for ourselves. By this, he said, we enrich not only our lives but the lives of those around us.
Paul Sprague, president of the Gouverneur Luncheon Club expressed his appreciation and that of the assembled guests and members for Dr. Piskor's inspiring remarks and also thanked Charles Pickard who introduced Dr. Piskor.
Sprague observed that Dr. Piskor's remarks pertain not only to the younger generation but also hold truth for those who are older as well.
One Luncheon Club member commented, "Dr. Piskor's remarks have truth and meaning to all of us. It reminds us, as it often need to be, that the values which some people say are 'old fashioned' are not dead but make us all better people if we adhere to them."
