MAY 2

FRANCIS FOY

Francis Foy has been remembered for his experiences as a World War II pilot. Foy was stationed at the 23rd Fighter Group in England, where he flew missions over the City of Munich. On May 3, 1945, he was released from captivity, marking the end of the war.

Foy continued to serve in the military after the war, but his experiences during the war continued to shape his life. He eventually found himself in a job where he was responsible for safekeeping children who had been orphaned during the war.

Foy's experiences have influenced his work ever since. He has been involved in various community events, and he continues to share his stories with others.
