played, "Morceau de Concert."

Bush then carried the night into several movements of music along with his pianist, filling the newly renovated Freeport High School auditorium with echoes of French horn and piano keys.

Backstage, Bush credited his mentors that have motivated him, and encouraged students to look for the right teachers to guide them in their music careers.

"Music is all about relationships," Bush said. "You have to have skills, and be talented, but you also have to know how to treat people well and I think that can be the most important thing for students."

The French horn player also curbed the some of the comments surrounding the music industry today, saying it's important for students to recognize their passion for music and "go for it."

"I hear a lot of people say 'don't go into music', but when I do things like this for students, I like to open that door for students, to say you absolutely can do this and make a life out of this," he said.

CLASSICAL MUSICIAN JOHN-MORGAN BUSH performed a collection of music from Bach to Mozart during the June 3 Freeport Community Concert Association concert at Freeport High School.
