GRADUATION EXERCISES

The graduation exercises of a school or college are a massive and carefully managed affair. They are treated in different ways, and assume different forms.

In the old style graduation, picked ones of the graduates, or if the class was small, the whole bunch of them, would be called up for essays, orations, musical performances, etc. This showed the public what education has done for these young people and made scholastic achievement popular.

Then it has been and is quite generally customary at these functions, to have some noted educator or leading thinker deliver an address which may run on educational lines. People will listen on these occasions, and many learn something of modern thought from the utterances thus heard.

Graduation is also an opportunity for the students to express the thoughts, the humor, the sentiment, which these four years of study and intimacy have left in their minds. Class day exercises are arranged for this purpose, and there you learn how the students react to all this stream of wisdom and to all the fun and frolic and the fascinations of society have left on them. If you want to see what the studerts really are, attend their class day.

The whole thing is a grand advertisement of education. It makes culture seem interesting and enticing. Younger people who have looked with some contempt on the rewards of study, begin to see that these graduates have acquired something that is much beyond their present range of power and something that they want. And people generally become more ambitious to have their children share these inspirations and experiences.

MANY INCORPORATIONS FILED AT ALBANY

Albany, June 9—The butcher, the baker and the candlestick maker were all represented among the companies that incorporated in New York state last month, according to a report just issued by Robert Moses, Secretary of State. New York state is going ahead by leaps nad bounds these days in companies incorporating. All this means activity. Companies are being formed and incorporating in this old state at a rate of better than 2,000 a month. The last five months have seen 11,685 companies receiving charters from the Secretary of State, a gain of 140 over the same period last year. New York state is setting the pace for the whole world these days. As might be expected, real estate and construction continue to lead. All told last month there were 2,261 companies of all sorts incorporated. Outside of New York, Erie county led with 61 companies, Nassau and Westchester counties running neck and neck with 50 each.
