COW MEADOW

or both, for some public recreational use.'"

In a statement issued to this newspaper, Mrs. Kratovil said she was representative of the sentiments of many civic organizations throughout Freeport explaining that "it will be cheaper to buy Cow Meadow outright for recreational and public land use than to go on paying several hundred dollars from your tax pocket every year for homes using Freeport services and school children using Freeport schools.

"The Village of Freeport is presently taking necessary steps towards acquiring Cow Meadow by condemnation for just such public use. But if this proposed zoning change goes through now, it could double the amount necessary to acquire it.

"If homes are built, school and village taxes must be increased by thousands of dollars each year forever. In other words, we present residents will pay — and pay — and continue to pay, one way or another."

In an earlier statement this week, Mayor Sweeney warned that residential development of the 170-acre Cow Meadow would have "disastrous" effects on the tax rate necessitating added police and fire protection as well as a $2,000,000 school addition.

Acting on the recommendation of the Cow Meadow Committee headed by John B. Mack, Freeport is preparing condemnation proceedings. Should the marshland be rezoned from its present Industrial to Residential A, the purchase price would soar.

The Town Board with Palmer D. Farrington presiding meets Tuesday morning to consider the zoning revision based on a report by the Merrick Planning Commission. If approved, it will be the first major change in the Town's rezoning code in some 30 years.

Since Freeport has a large stake in the controversial Cow Meadow property, the delegation to the meeting is expected to voice its strong opposition to the proposed rezoning.
