THE HERALD OF PROGRESS.

ANNUAL JACOB B. DAY, EDITOR.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, Feb. 2, 1858.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Sixty Cents per year, payable in advance.

One dollar per year, payable in advance.

To be sent to any Post Office in the United States.

SALUTATION.

Taste establishment and regular publication of an innovative journal. The facts and principles of Progress may be justified, irrespective of the social, poetic, or religious prejudice of individuals and societies, else the world cannot be improved through the influence of the individual.

AN ANGEL IN THE HOUSE.

BY REV. J. H. MCCLAIN.

How sweet it is, if children be not taught, but are trained in the way they should go, that they when they be old, they will not forsake it. (Deut. 32:11. )

The thoughts and ideas, which our children adopt, were impressed upon their minds while their infant mind was occupied with what is interesting, sensible, and edifying. As we shall see how far, however, the principles and teachings of our children are based upon the instruction which they received from us in their early years, we shall not only be benefited, but also be disposed to promote the best interests of our temporal and spiritual welfare.

The principles of Progress are not only the basis of all true social and moral progress, but are also the foundation of all true social and moral progress. It is the only method by which we can hope to realize the ideal of society.

It is the object of the present article to prove, that, in order to promote the progress of society, we must give attention to the cultivation of the moral and intellectual powers of our children, as well as to the physical and material interests of the community.

In the course of the present article, we have attempted to prove, that the principles of Progress are not only the basis of all true social and moral progress, but are also the foundation of all true social and moral progress. It is the only method by which we can hope to realize the ideal of society.

To the Leaders and Contributors.

It is the duty of the leaders and contributors of a periodical to do their utmost to promote the progress of society. They should, therefore, adopt the principles of Progress, and act accordingly.

To our Readers and Contributors.

It is the duty of the leaders and contributors of a periodical to do their utmost to promote the progress of society. They should, therefore, adopt the principles of Progress, and act accordingly.

A MEEMPHAN CRAVAT.

To all newspaper and periodical publishers.

To encourage the publication of the principles of Progress, we hereby offer a prize of $50 for the best essay on the subject. The essays must be sent to the Editor of the Herald of Progress, and must be received before the first of May, 1858.

OUR REPLY.

To Mr. F. S. Storrs.

We are happy to reply to the remarks of Mr. F. S. Storrs, which appear to have been misplaced in the Herald of Progress, and which we are about to publish.

We have examined the remarks of Mr. F. S. Storrs, and we find that they are not in accordance with the principles of Progress. We therefore request him to withdraw them, and to publish an apology for his remarks.

We are happy to reply to the remarks of Mr. F. S. Storrs, which appear to have been misplaced in the Herald of Progress, and which we are about to publish.

We have examined the remarks of Mr. F. S. Storrs, and we find that they are not in accordance with the principles of Progress. We therefore request him to withdraw them, and to publish an apology for his remarks.

We are happy to reply to the remarks of Mr. F. S. Storrs, which appear to have been misplaced in the Herald of Progress, and which we are about to publish.

We have examined the remarks of Mr. F. S. Storrs, and we find that they are not in accordance with the principles of Progress. We therefore request him to withdraw them, and to publish an apology for his remarks.