Drive To Reduce Nation's 98-Deaths-A-Day Traffic Toll

CHICAGO, Dec. 19—(PPI)—The nation's three new programs of road safety, emphasizing the dangers of speeding and reckless driving, have been adopted by a number of states, but a few states have yet to make a decision on the matter.

The first program, known as the National Road Safety Council, was founded in 1919 and has been active in promoting road safety since that time. The second program is the American Road Safety Association, formed in 1923, which aims to improve road conditions and reduce accidents through better design and maintenance of roads. The third program is the National Motorists Association, founded in 1929, which advocates the rights of motorists and opposes any regulations that would hinder their freedom of movement.

The programs are supported by a number of organizations, including the United States Department of Commerce, the American Automobile Association, and the American Red Cross.
