U. S. Army's Greatest Peace-time War Maneuvers Brought to Close

Drum Demands "All Citizens Be Called to Serve With Us inPreparing for the Threatened Crisis" During Critical Defense Officers Under Command

In a call to arms designed to "awaken the American spirit in the hour of need," the U. S. Army's greatest peace-time war maneuvers, known as "Operation Deep Freeze," came to a close today. The maneuvers, which were conducted under the command of Gen. George C. Marshall, were intended to prepare the nation for the eventuality of war and to test the efficiency of the armed forces.

The Army's "fire in the hole" was illustrated by the demonstration of the nation's first atomic bomb, which was successfully detonated in the Nevada desert. The demonstration was part of the maneuvers and served to underscore the importance of nuclear weapons in modern warfare.
