

King Offers Bill to Control Dairy Imports

U. S. Rep. Carleton J. King, 30th congressional district of New York, said Monday he was introducing legislation to help remedy the problem of dairy imports and to preserve the quality of food in this country.

The proposal introduced by Congressman King is entitled the Foreign Dairy Inspection Act of 1967. It will require nations that export dairy products to America to meet standards of sanitation that American dairy producers must meet.

In a brief statement, the New York congressman said, "The purpose of my bill to require equal sanitation standards is twofold. First, we would protect the consumer. Second, we would protect the American dairy farmer from unjust foreign competition. The importation of dairy products into this country is proceeding at the rate of more than three billion pounds of milk equivalent per year. Only the smallest fraction of this amount is produced under conditions acceptable in the United States. The carelessness with which foreign dairy goods may be produced is in large part the reason for the low prices of these products. Without the high cost of sanitary methods, foreign producers can invade and capture domestic markets."

Commenting further on the need for legislation to preserve the quality of food in America, King said, "It seems ironic that all the effort and expense taken by the food and drug administration and the nation's dairy men to insure the production of quality food, when imported cheeses and dairy solids are subject to very little regulation."

Subdivision Regulations Continued

by William T. Sherin
Chairman, Easton Town Planning Board

For the past two weeks we have discussed subdivision regulations in detail for a specific purpose as this is one area where serious thinking has been done by the planning board. If such regulations are proposed for the town, the residents should know as much as possible about them. Of course public hearings have to be held if this should be the case and everyone would be able to have his or her say, the opportunity to be heard.

Without effective subdivision control through a local planning board, the vacant land in a community could be fully developed without any space having been set aside for the recreation areas or parks that are necessary to make a stable residential section. The costs of acquiring needed land for parks can be met, at least in part, through the setting aside of sites by the developer at the time of subdivision approval. Fast growing towns such as Cliffton Park, Halfmoon, Glenville, Niskayuna have found this to be very important. It also takes considerable pressure from a town by residents demanding recreational facilities when such facilities are built into a development.

In approving a subdivision, the local planning board can require that the lot layout be related to the character of the land so as to eliminate or minimize future applications for variances due to lot shapes or other particular conditions. Additionally subdivision control can avoid most of the applications for relief on the basis of hardship due to unusual access situations, since the possibility of the erection of buildings on inadequate streets or on undesirable rights of way, or on narrow access strips can be almost entirely eliminated in new lot and street layouts. Under the planning board's power to review existing undeveloped or partially developed subdivisions, these problems in some of the older layouts can also be materially reduced.

A county planning board is authorized under law to exercise the power of subdivision control in the unincorporated area of towns that do not have planning boards which have been given the authority to approve subdivisions. In this case, the county planning board has jurisdiction over new subdivisions in the same manner as that of a local planning board. This can lead to some complications sometimes as it once again is the loss of power locally, or at the town level, to a higher government. There is much concern most of the time about losing local say-so on things that are local business and this is another example. It is better to keep control on the local level where a more intimate touch is available and where the cause and effect are more easily seen and felt.

Next week—Conclusion Subdivision Regulations.

Cadet Brooks At West Point Centennial

Cadet John Mahan Brooks Jr. attended the centennial celebration at the United States military academy, West Point, this summer. Cadet Brooks is the son of Col. John M. Brooks, retired, of Leawood, Kansas, and grandson of General John B. Brooks, retired, of Greenwich. Cadet Brooks is a first year student at Manlius school in Manlius, and is the third generation of his family to attend this military school, his father and grandfather are both Manlius graduates.

Direct descendants of the first graduating class at West Point were special guests at the centennial celebration, and Cadet Brooks is a descendant of Frederick H. Mahan, who graduated tenth in the class of 1867 and was commissioned a second lieutenant of engineers. Frederick Mahan's two brothers graduated from the U. S. naval academy in 1859 and 1869. The oldest brother, Admiral Alfred Thayer Mahan, is well known for his outstanding works on naval seapower.

Following the centennial celebration Cadet Brooks' father received a letter from General Clark L. Ruffner, retired, in which he said, "This is to tell you how impressed I was with your son, John M. Brooks Jr., who attended our centennial celebration at West Point as a descendant of Frederick A. Mahan and as your representative. 'Not only was he completely capable of taking care of himself, but he contributed to the party immeasurably and had many complimentary remarks passed to me as to his appearance and conduct. He was absolutely outstanding, especially for a boy 15 years old, wearing his Manlius school uniform extremely well and with such military bearing. You can well be proud of him! I certainly was.'"
