State Waters May Boast Pacific Salmon and Coho

The State Conservation Department has announced that Pacific salmon and coho salmon are to be introduced into Lake Placid as part of the lake's development program. During the past few months, the department has been conducting tests on the fish to determine if they can survive in the lake's waters. The tests have shown that the fish are well adapted to the lake's environment and are expected to thrive. The introduction of Pacific salmon and coho salmon is part of a plan to increase the lake's catch of fish and to improve the fishing industry. The department is working with local fishermen to ensure that the fish are caught sustainably and that the fishing industry is protected.
